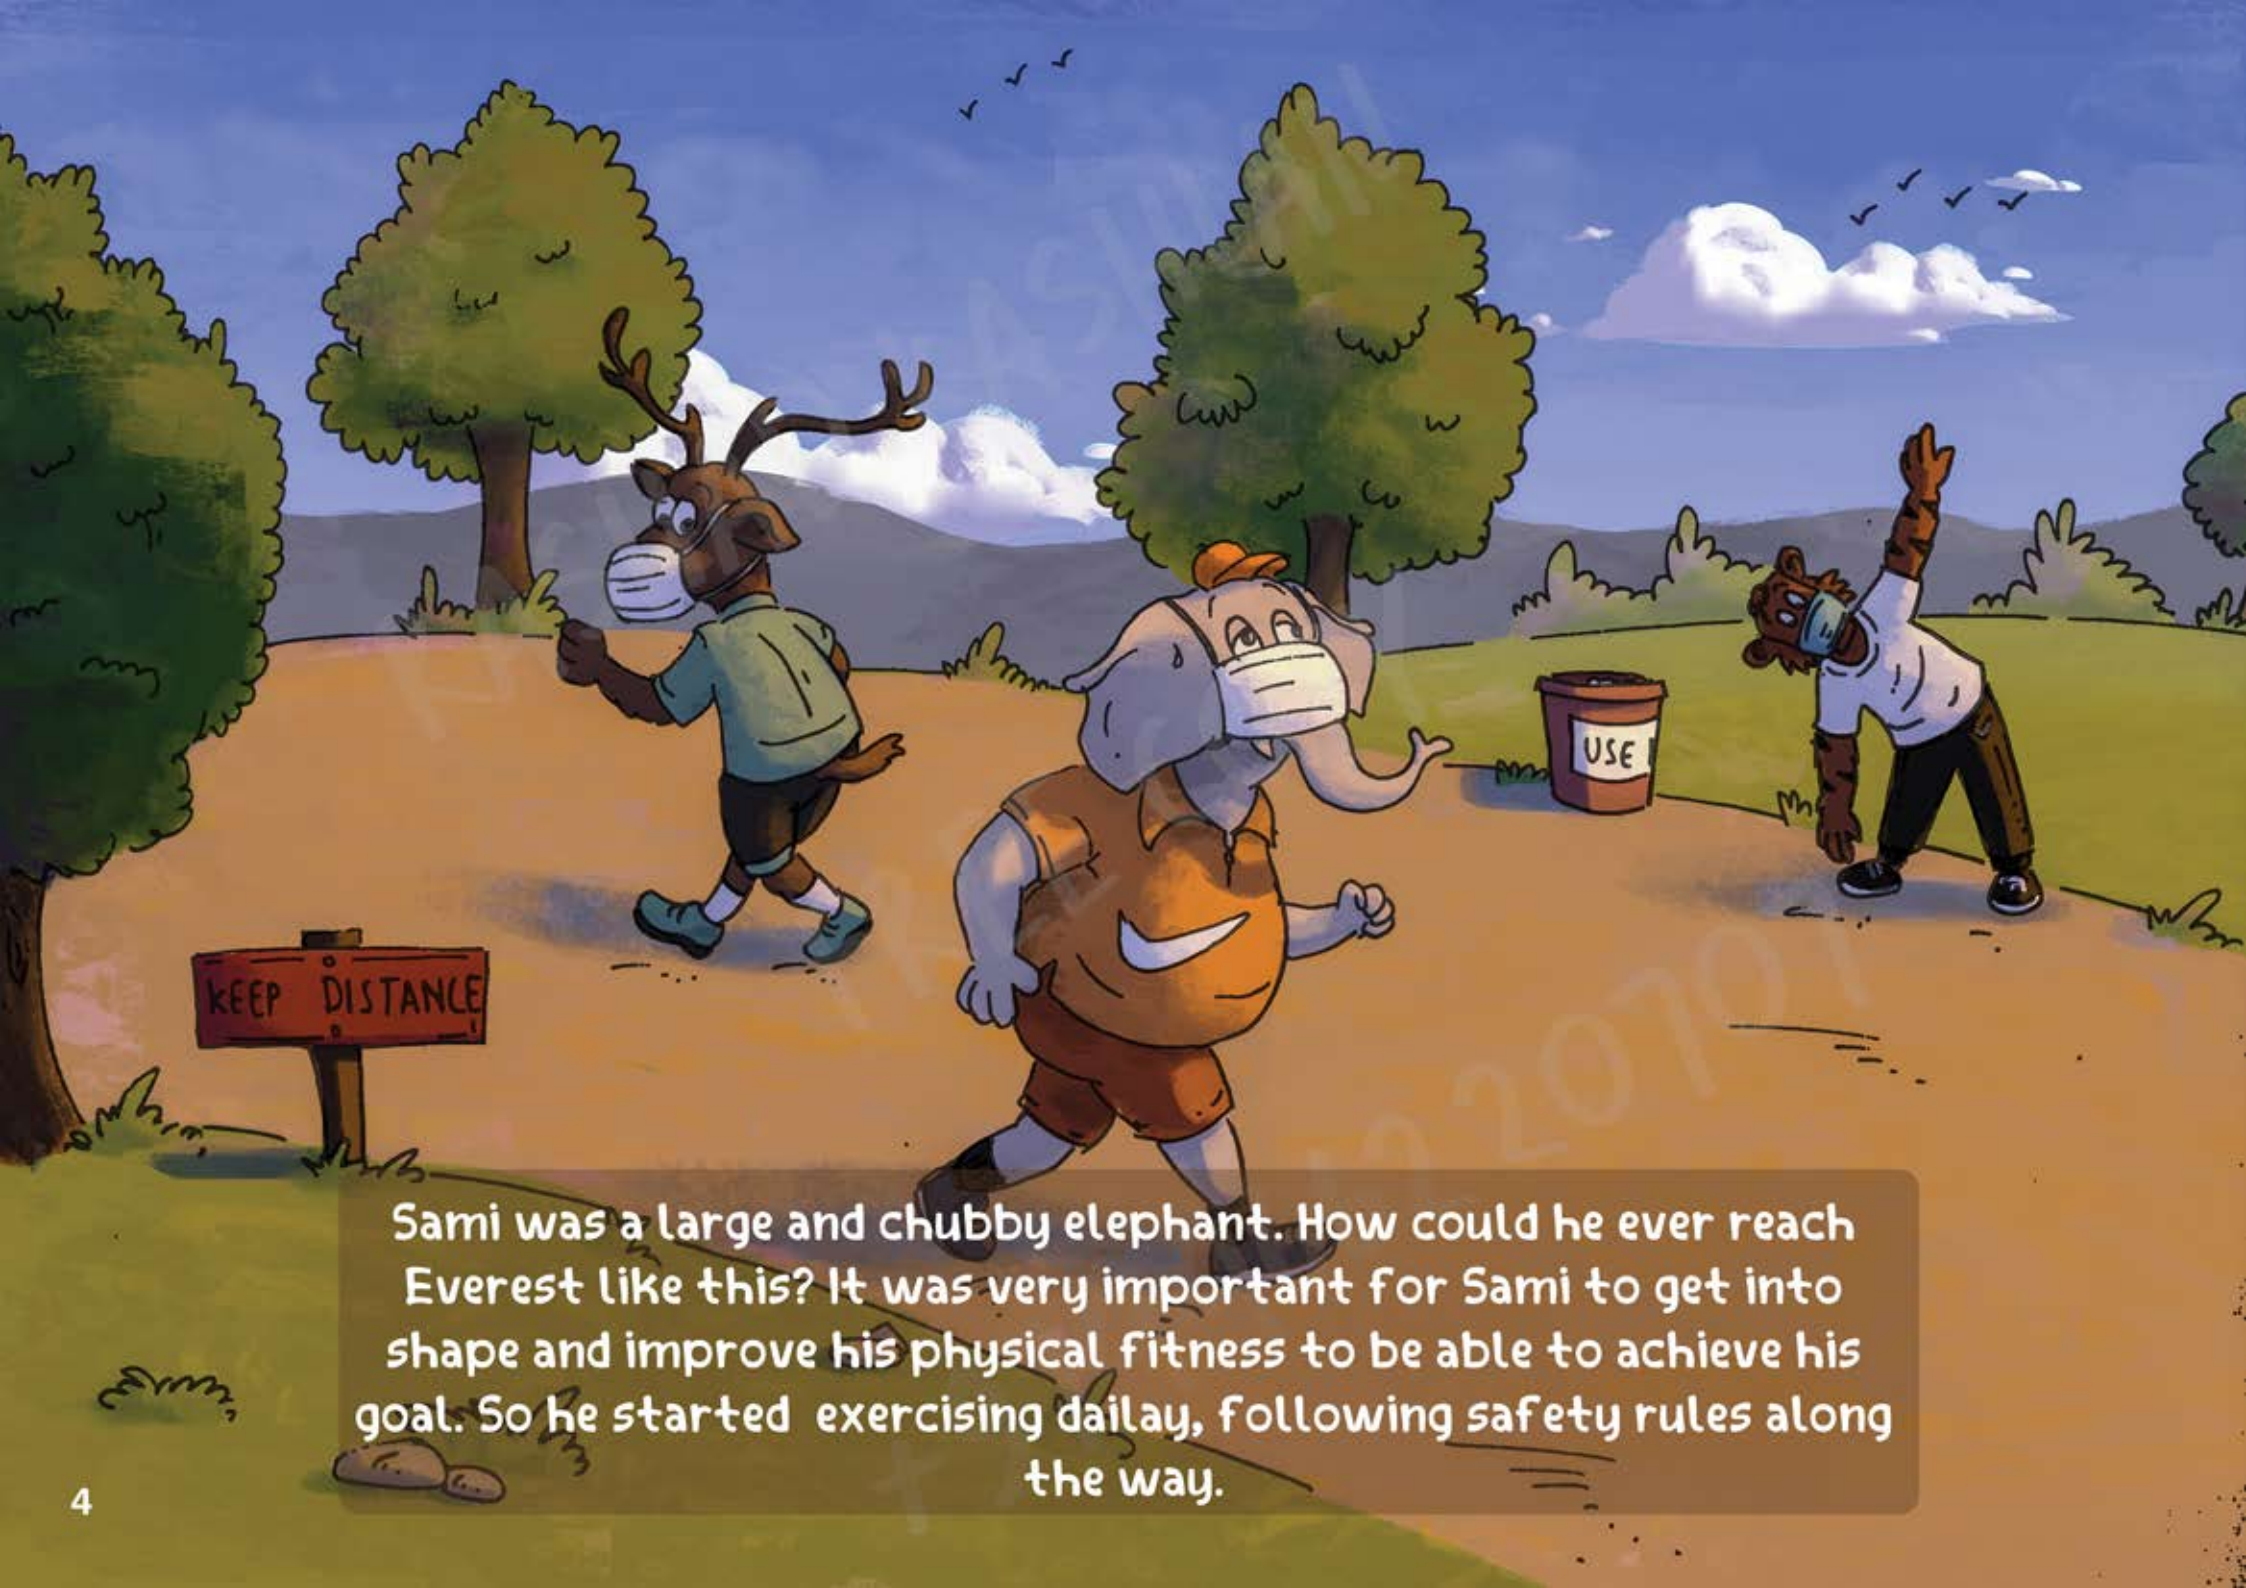
SAMI TREKKING TO EVEREST

RASHAD KASHLAN

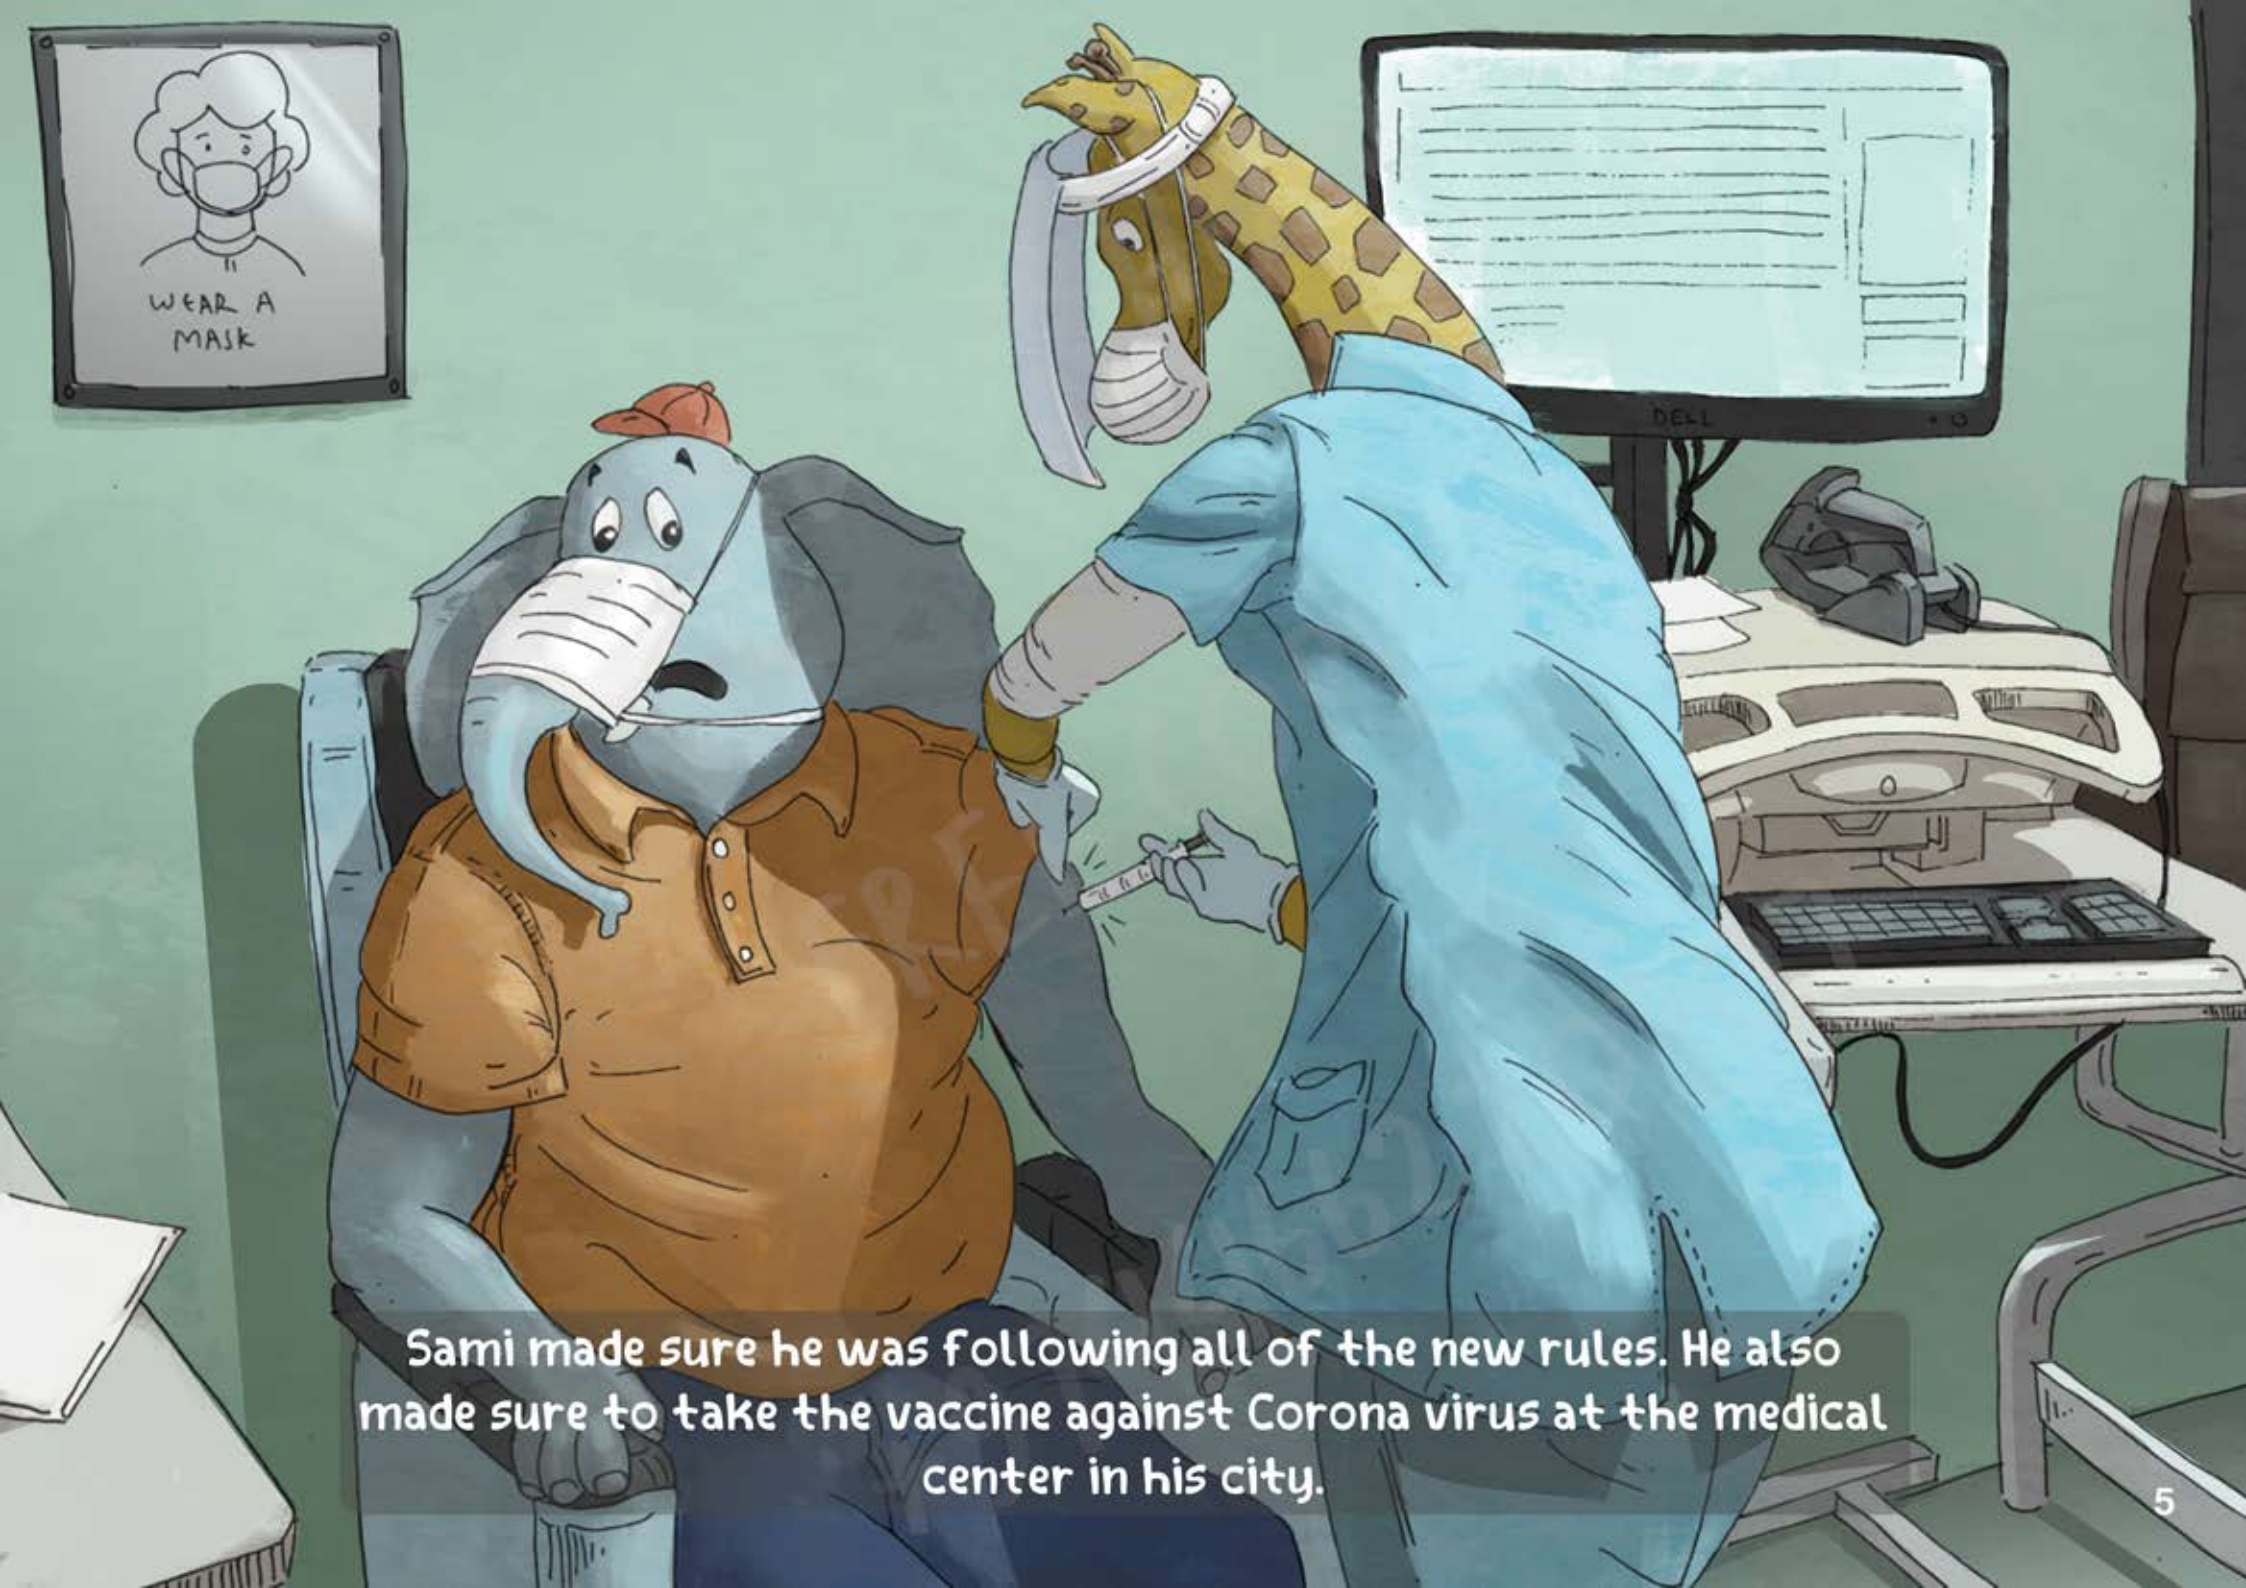
Sami the Elephant decided to take a trip to Nepal to start a new adventure, and to fulfill his dream, which was to reach the tallest mountain on earth, Mount Everest.

Meanwhile, something unexpected emerged and altered life on planet Earth - the Coronavirus. Now, life is governed by new rules and regulations.

Everyone has to adhere to social distancing, as well as sterilization of hands . Wearing a mask that covers noses and mouths has become mandatory for every individual.



Sami was a large and chubby elephant. How could he ever reach Everest like this? It was very important for Sami to get into shape and improve his physical fitness to be able to achieve his goal. So he started exercising dailay, following safety rules along the way.



Sami made sure he was following all of the new rules. He also made sure to take the vaccine against Corona virus at the medical center in his city.

Upon arriving at the airport, Sami diligently practiced social distancing, ensuring he wore his face mask consistently, even while inside the airplane.

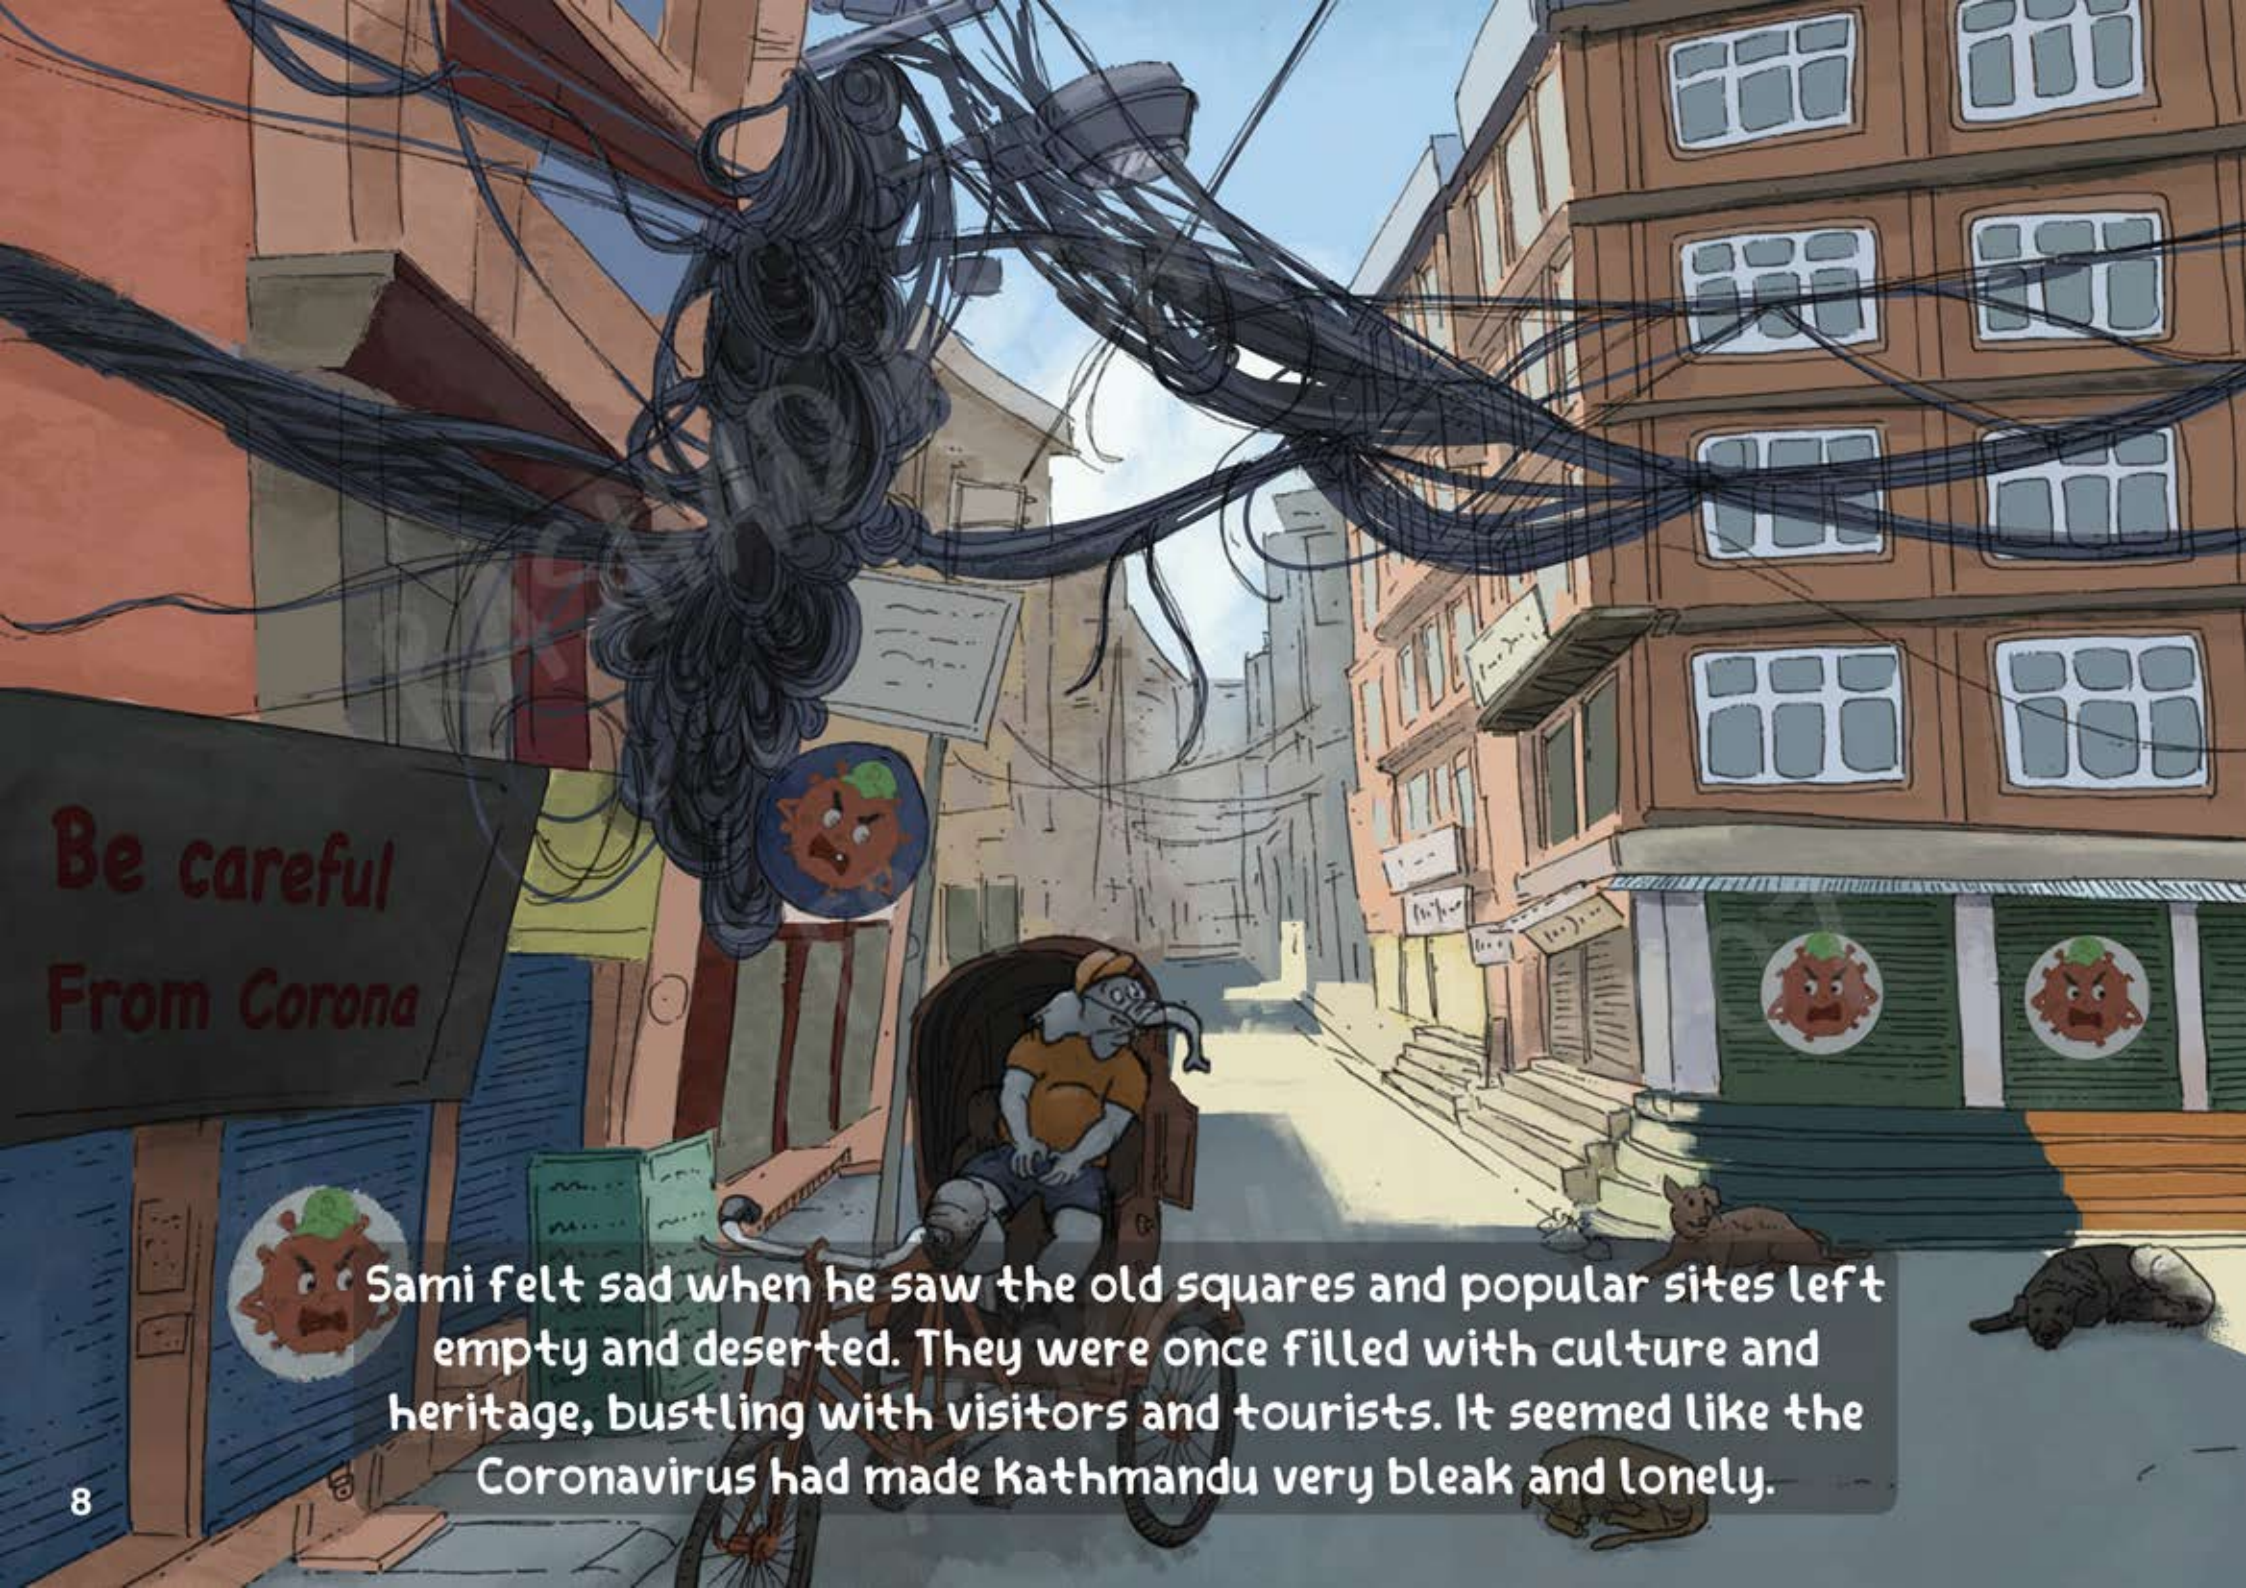
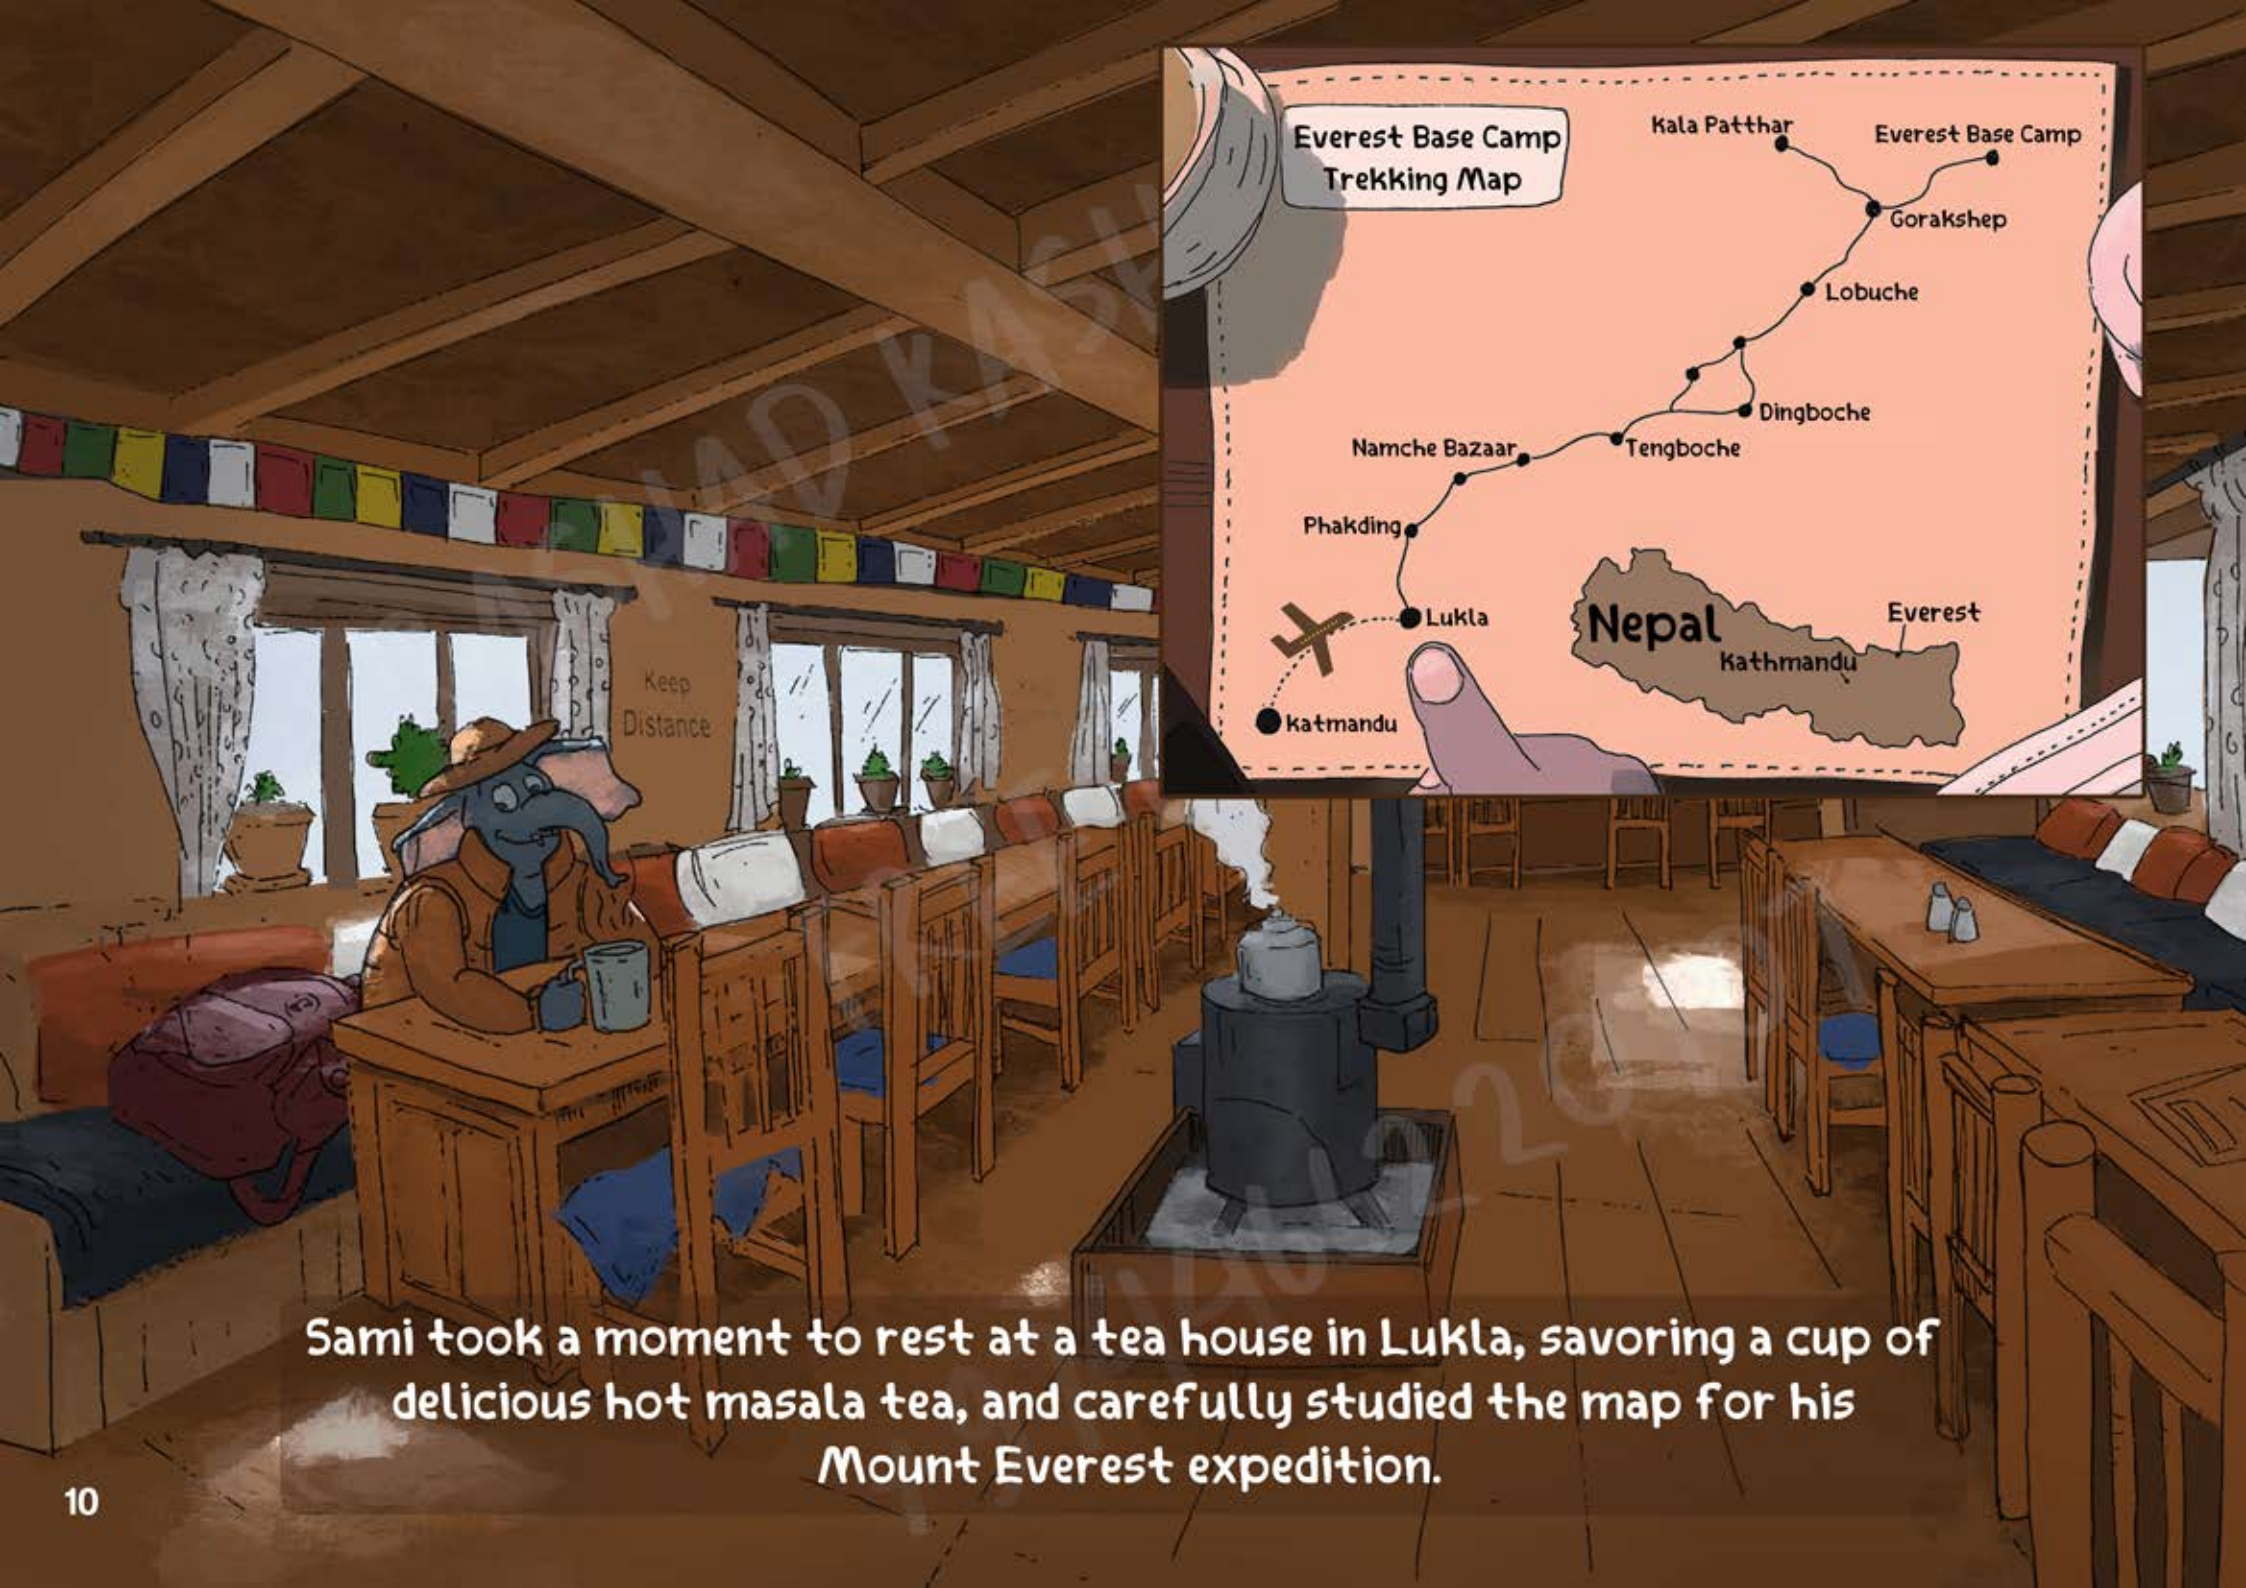
As the plane touched down in Kathmandu, the capital city of Nepal, Sami could feel the excitement building within him. He knew he was one step closer to fulfilling his dream of reaching Mount Everest.



Sami felt sad when he saw the old squares and popular sites left empty and deserted. They were once filled with culture and heritage, bustling with visitors and tourists. It seemed like the Coronavirus had made Kathmandu very bleak and lonely.

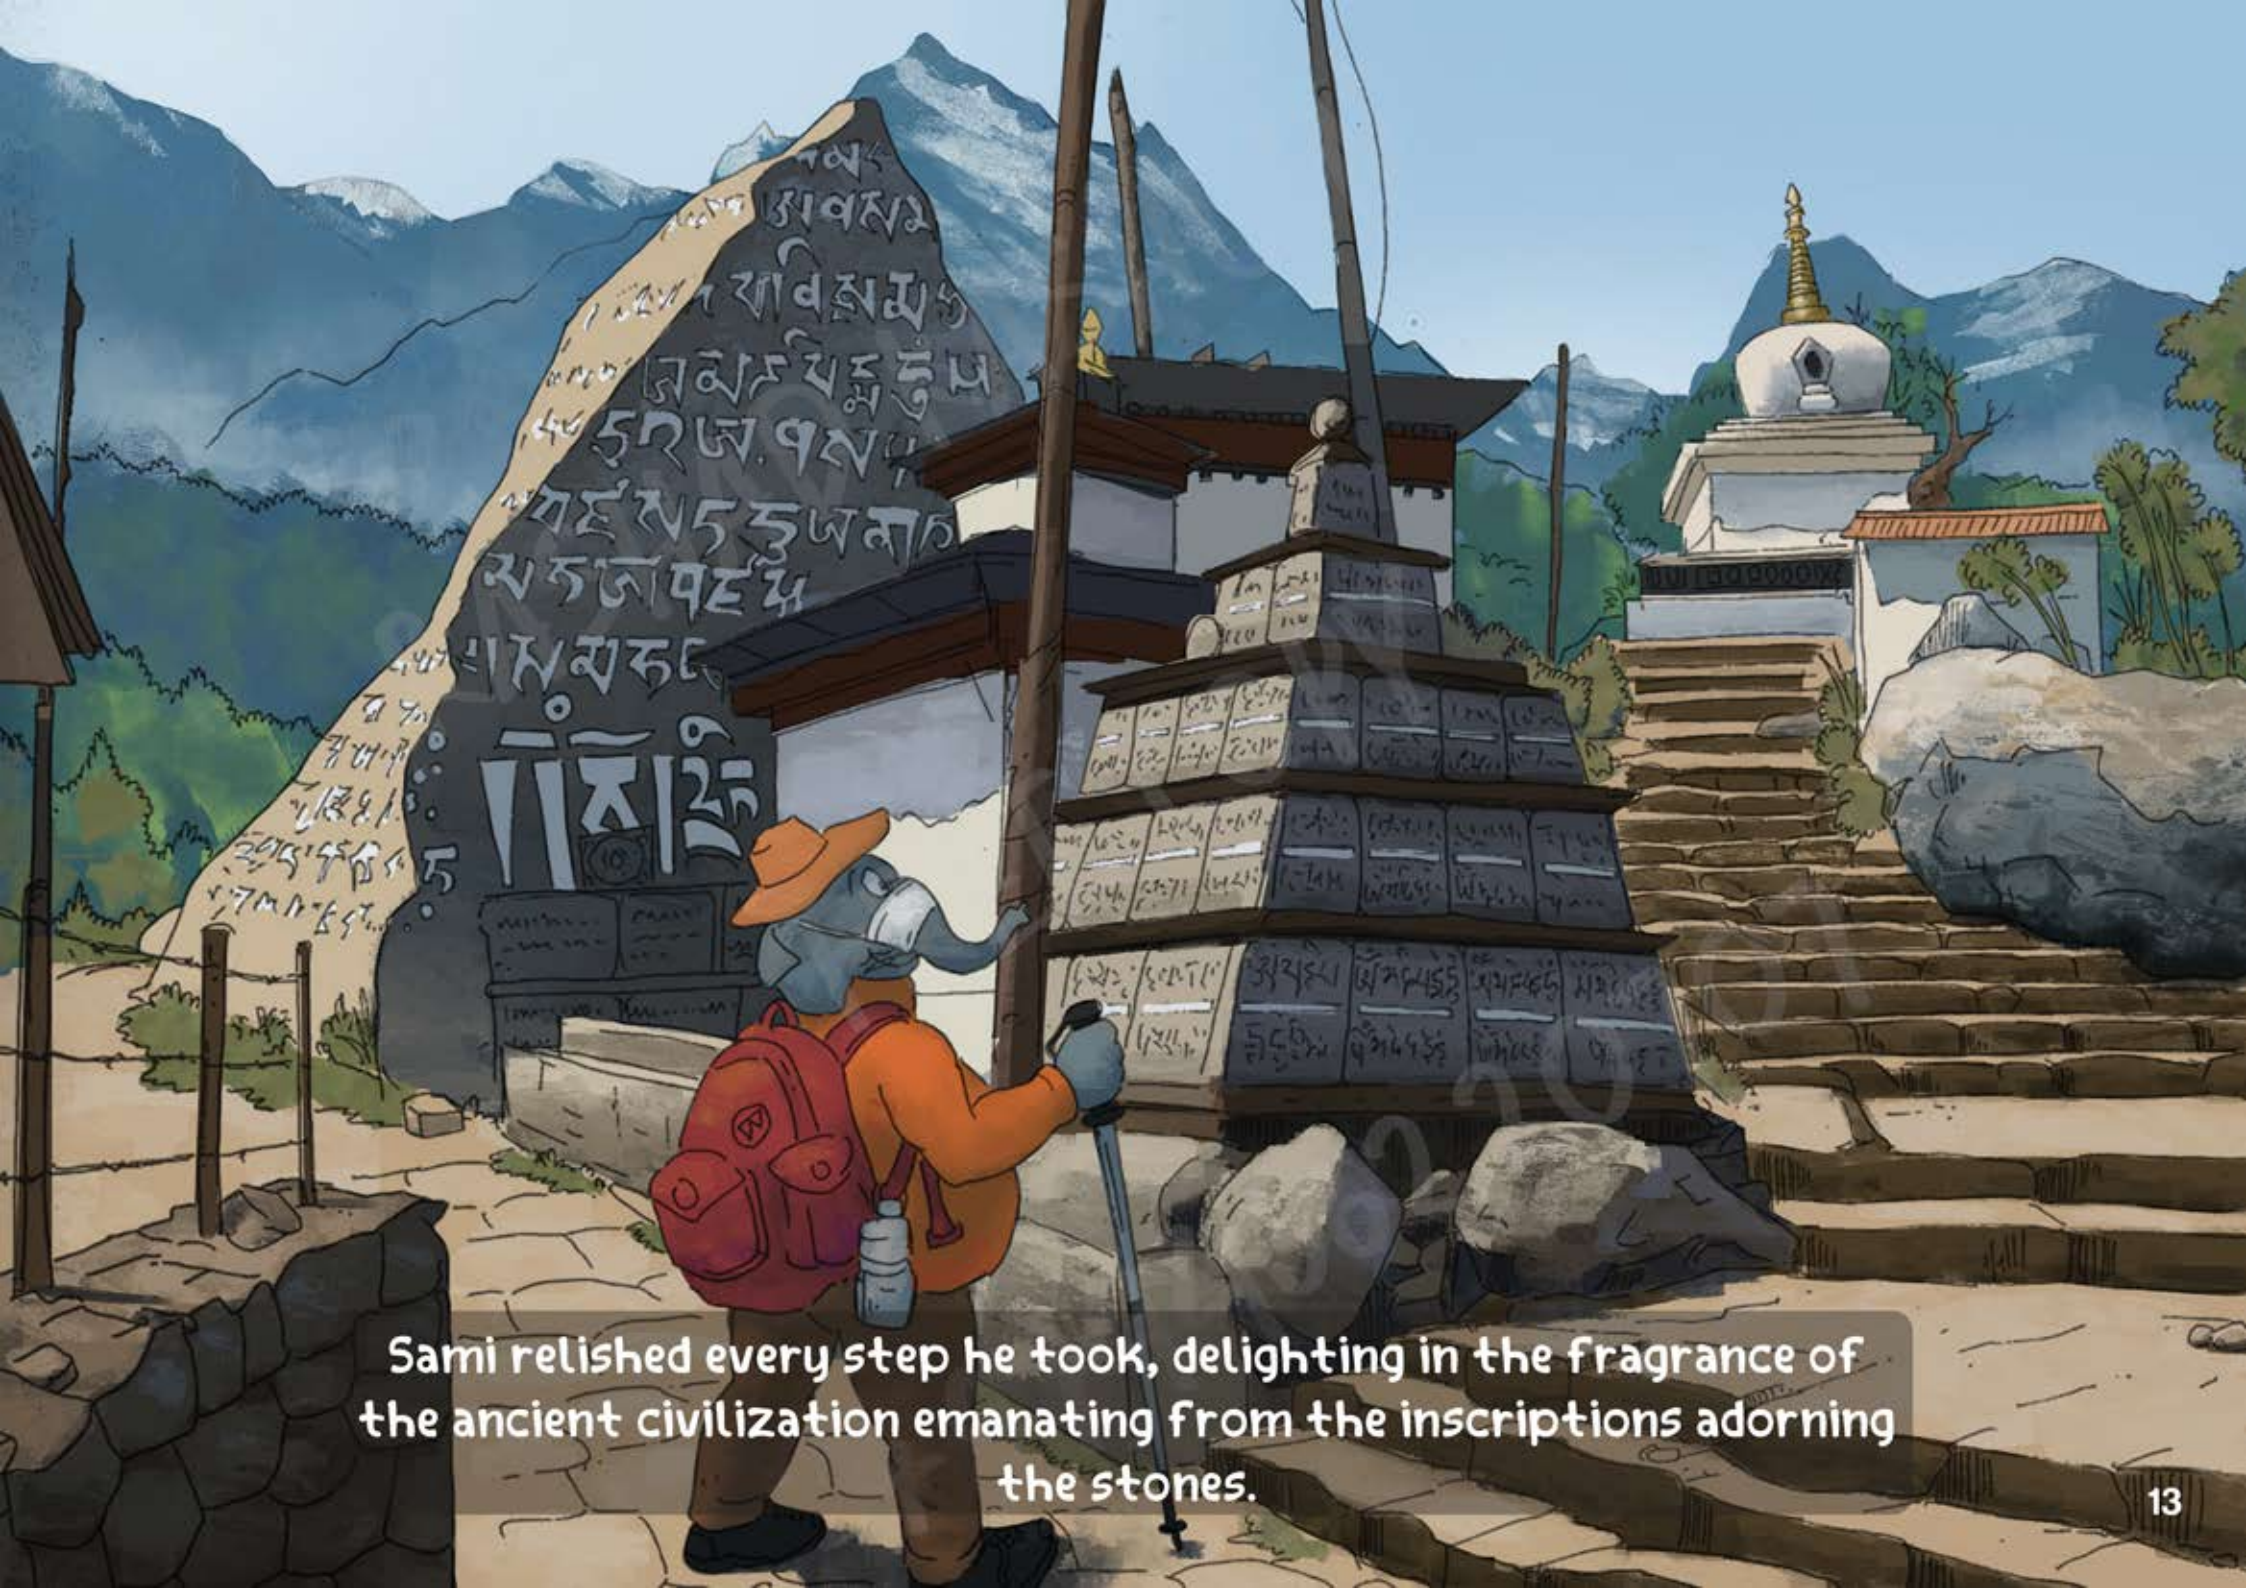
High above the clouds and amidst majestic mountains, Sami lived on an unforgettable adventure. Miraculously, the plane touched down safely at Lukla Airport, world's most dangerous airport.



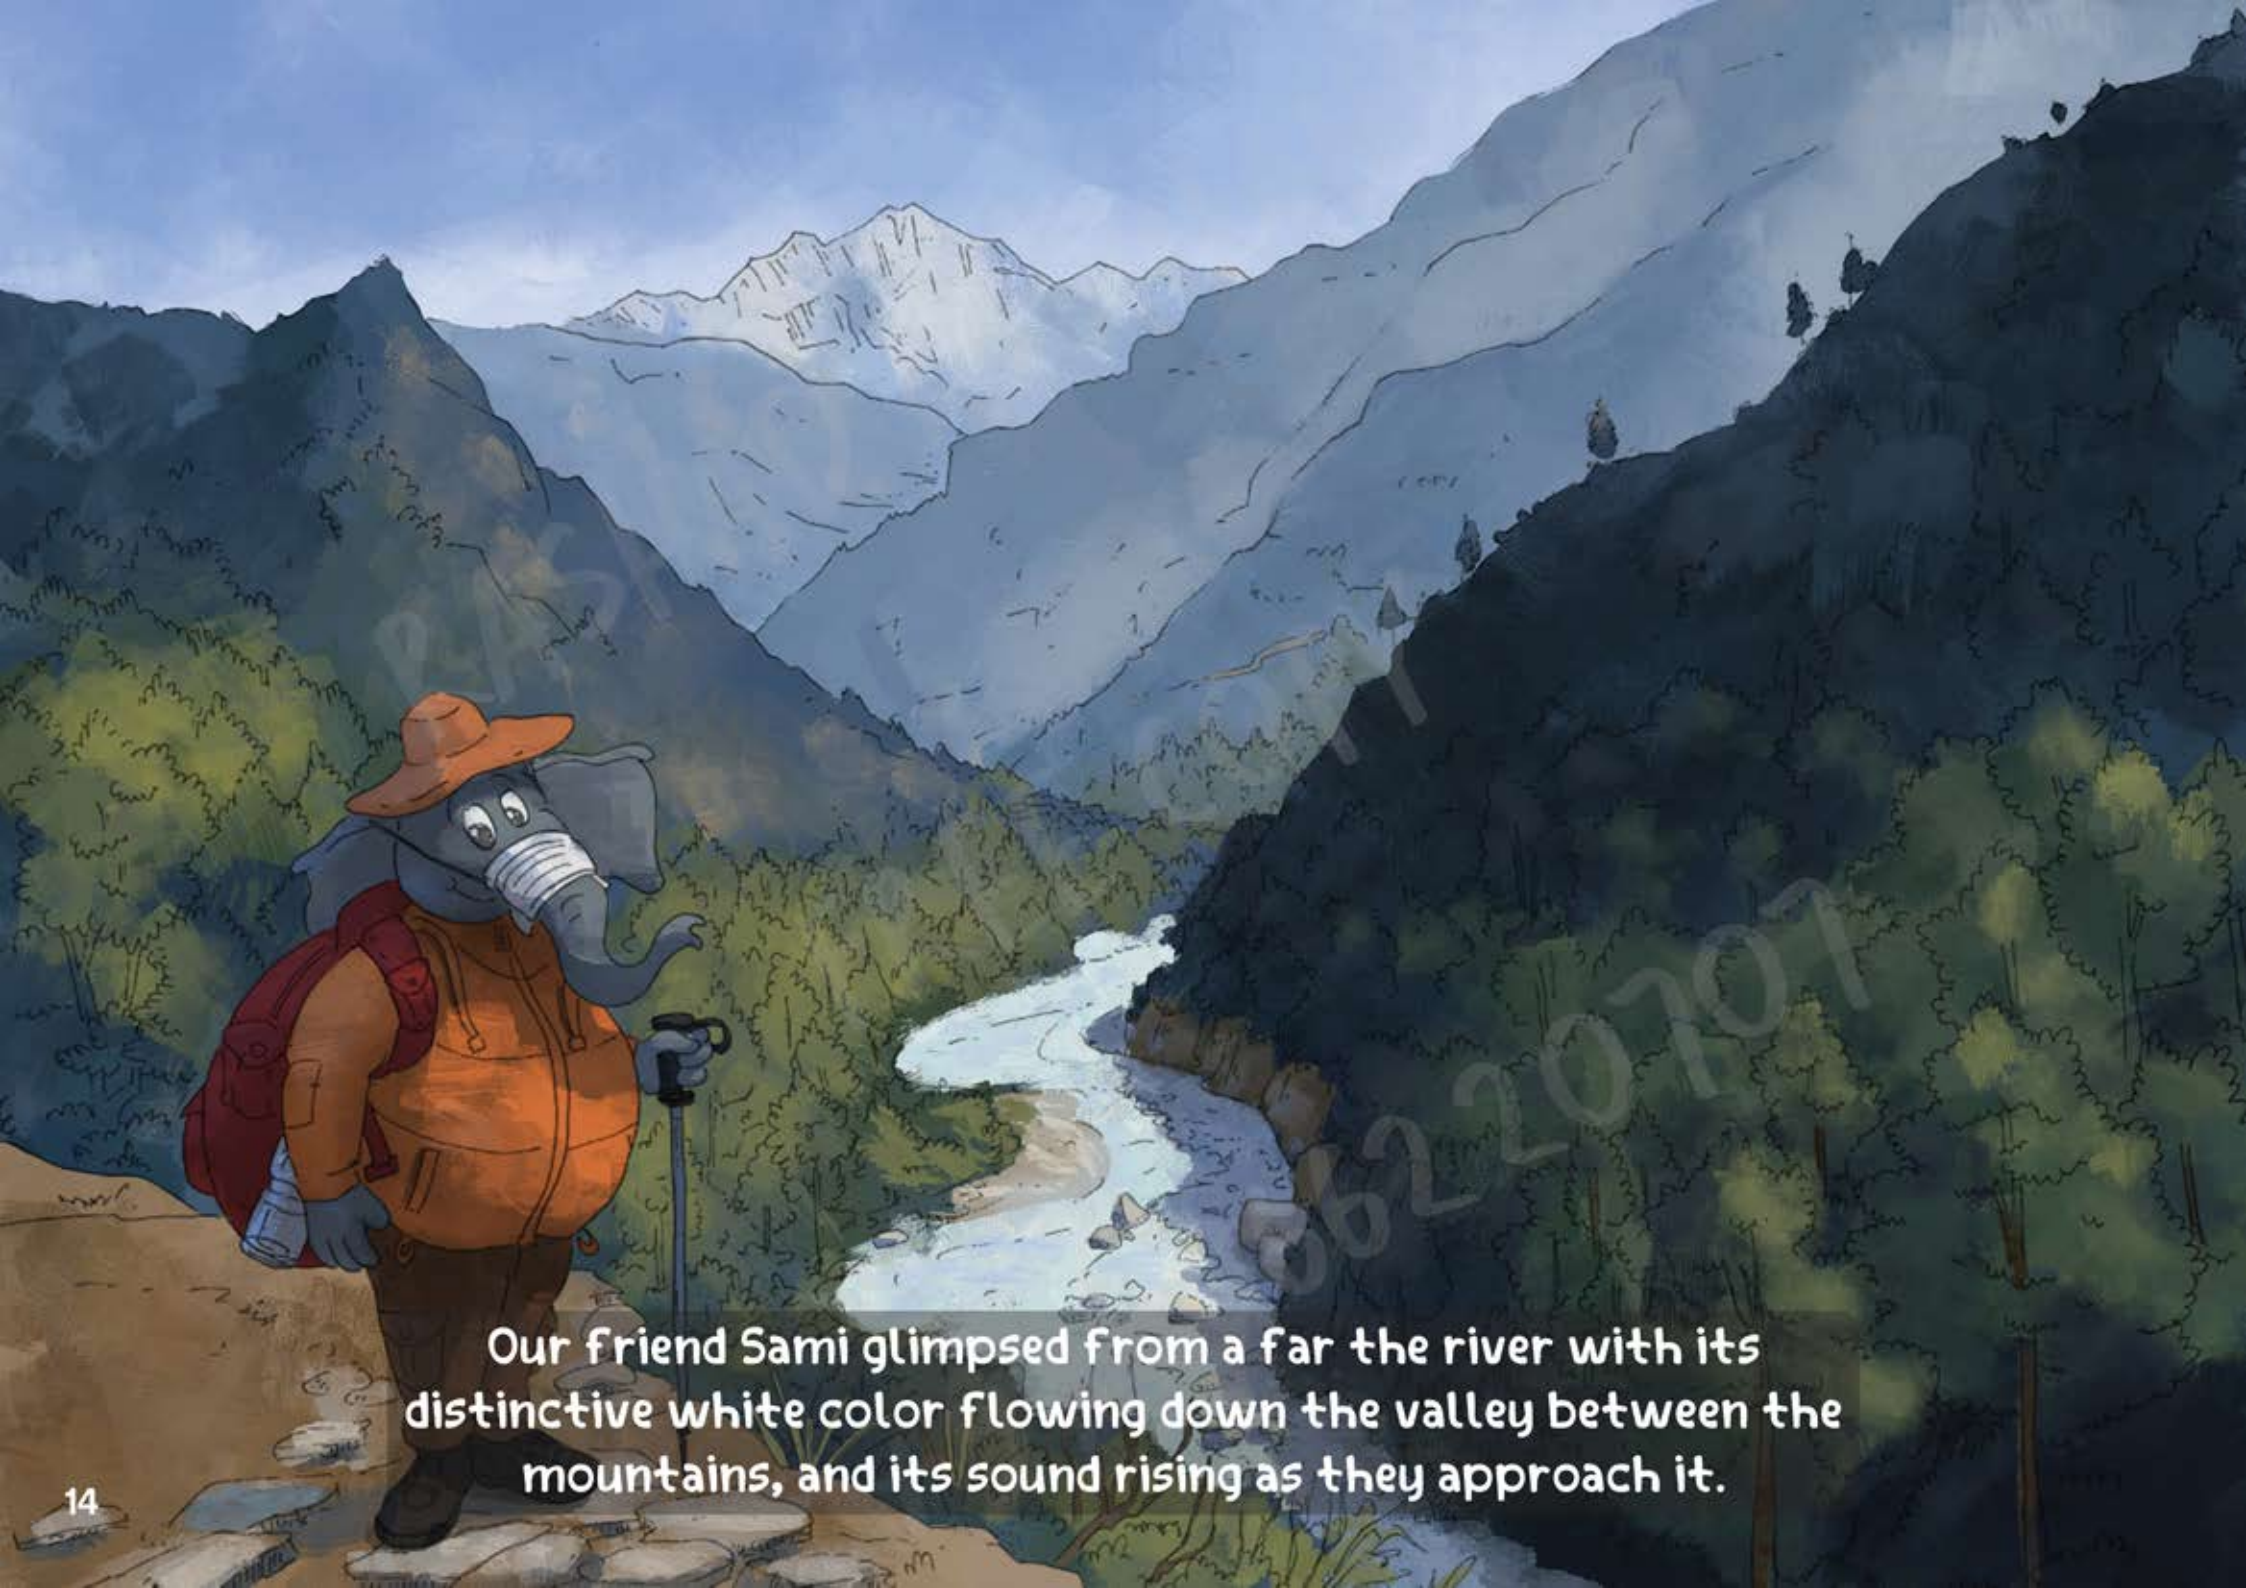
Sami took a moment to rest at a tea house in Lukla, savoring a cup of delicious hot masala tea, and carefully studied the map for his Mount Everest expedition.

Carrying his backpack, Sami explored the streets of Lukla, but the fear of the virus had instilled terror in the hearts of the local residents.

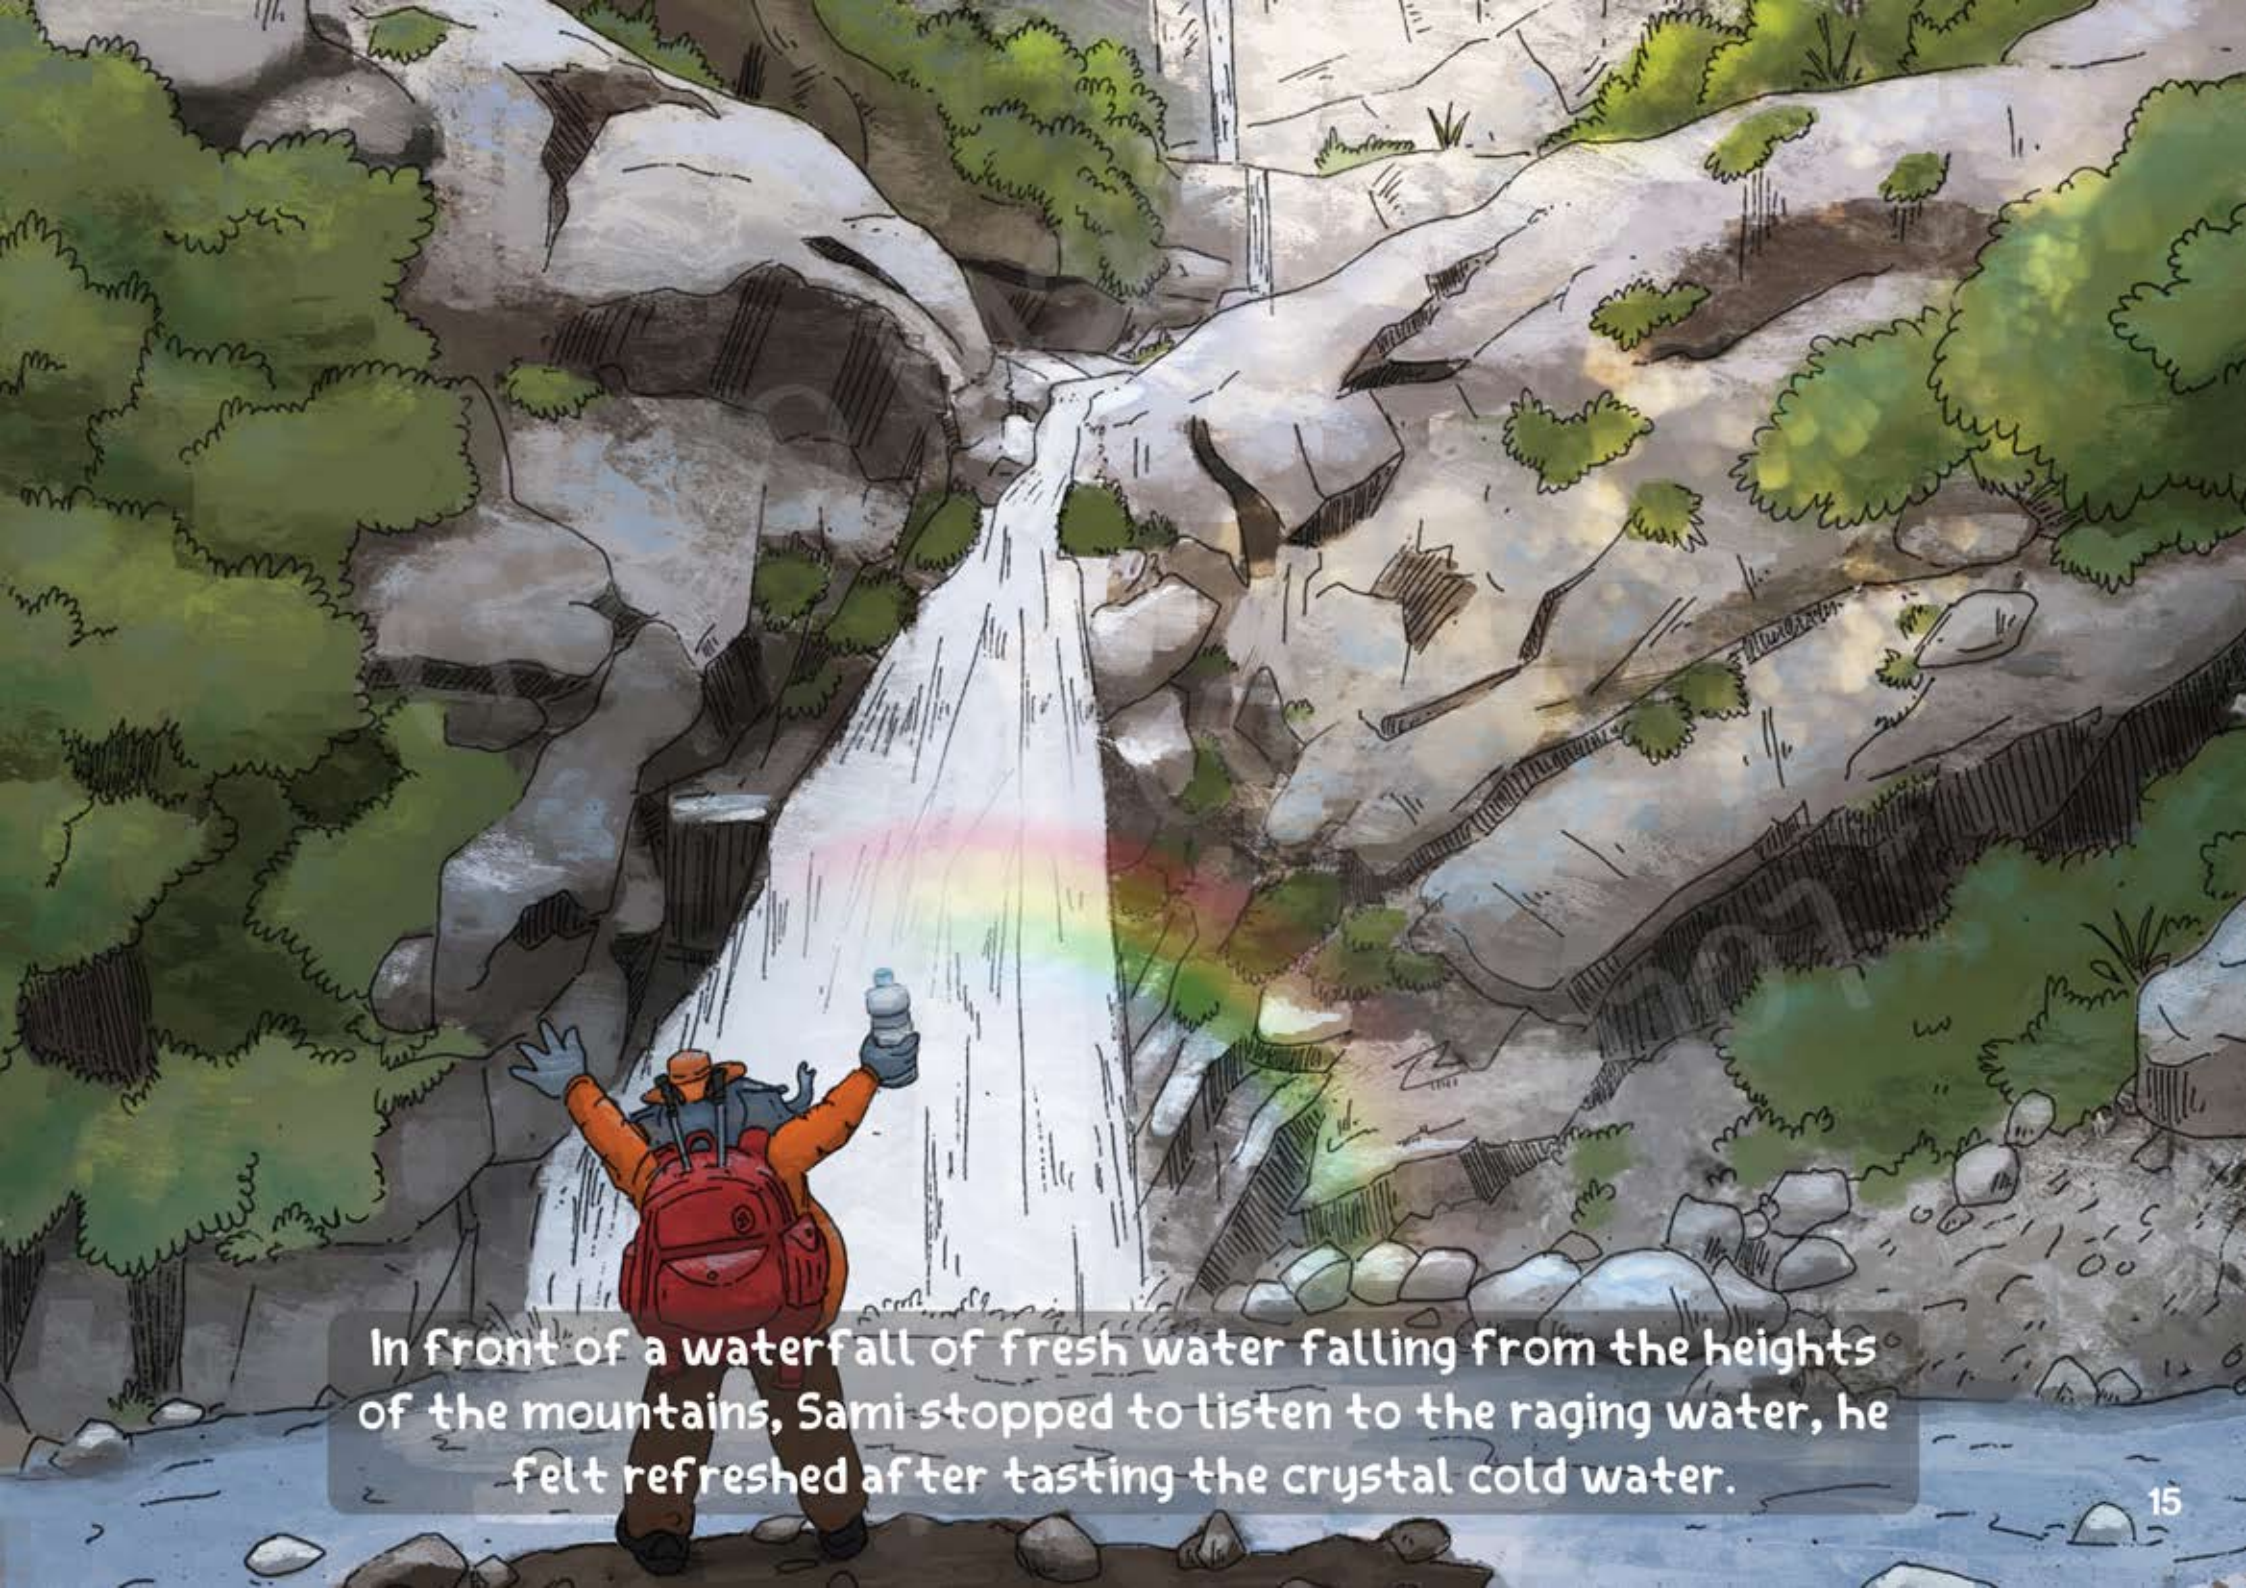
Sami kindly shared delicious sweets with the children he encountered, and they joyfully posed for souvenir photos together.



Sami relished every step he took, delighting in the fragrance of the ancient civilization emanating from the inscriptions adorning the stones.



Our friend Sami glimpsed from a far the river with its distinctive white color flowing down the valley between the mountains, and its sound rising as they approach it.

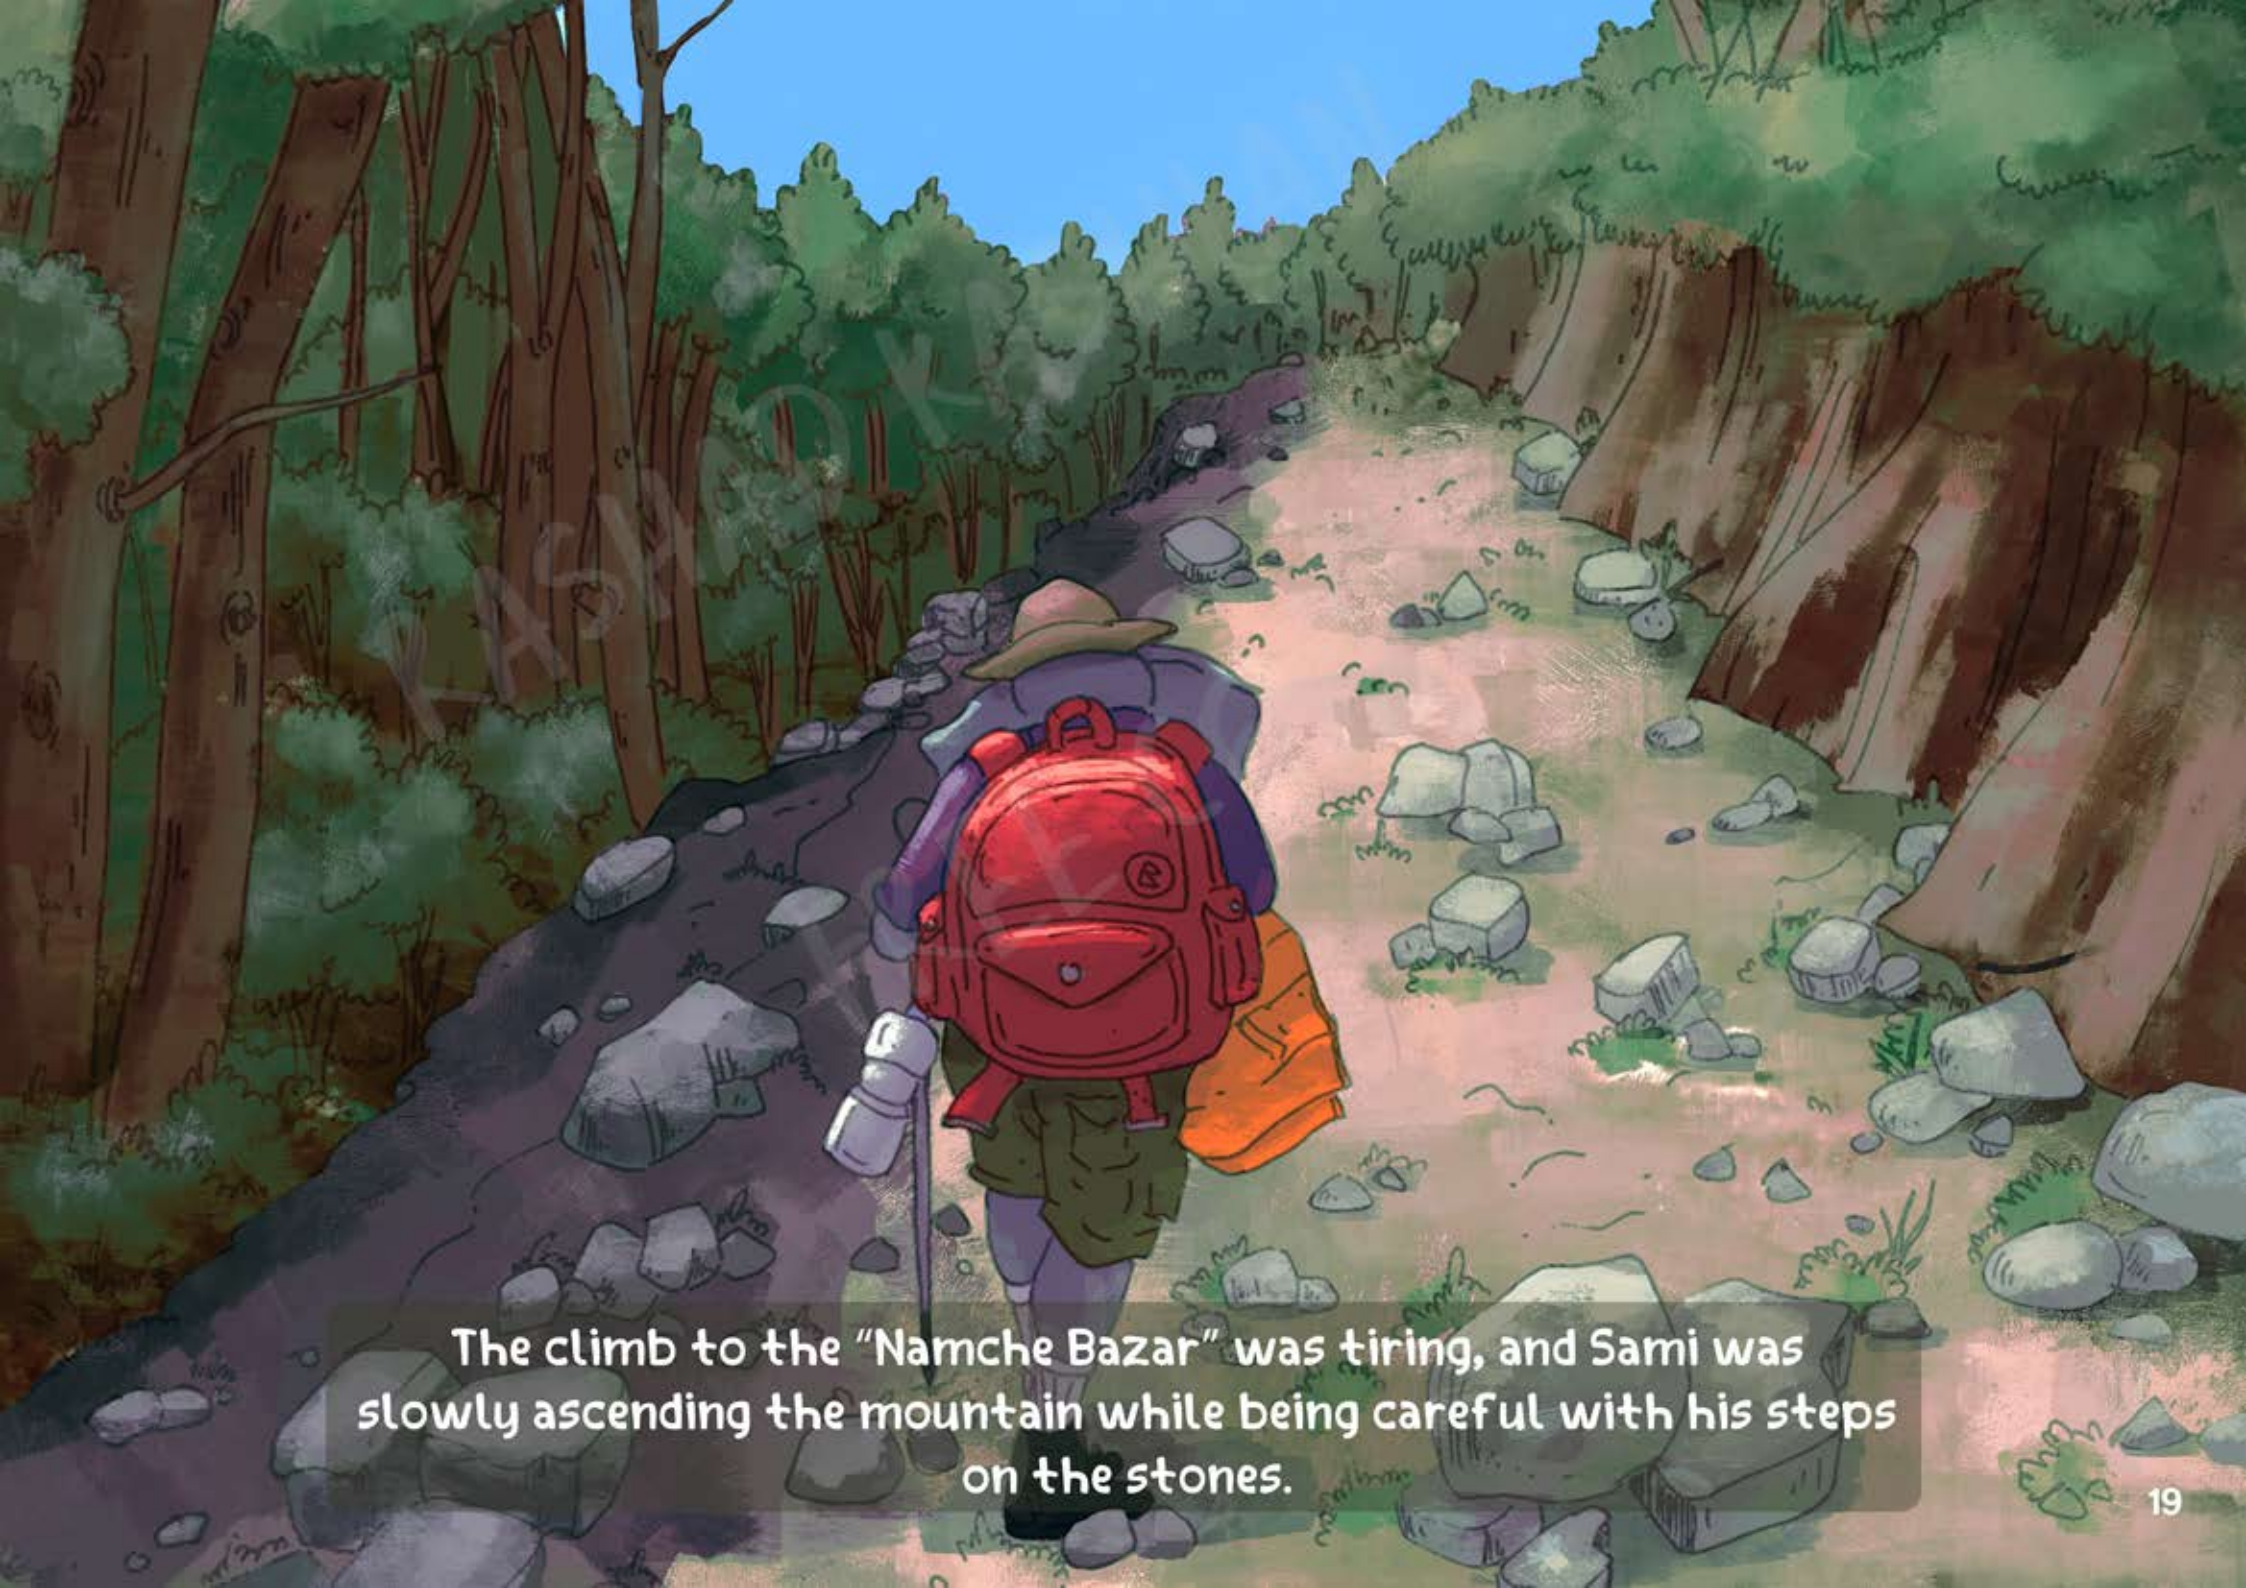


In front of a waterfall of fresh water falling from the heights of the mountains, Sami stopped to listen to the raging water, he felt refreshed after tasting the crystal cold water.

Sami arrived at the Sagarmatha sanctuary, and his determination to achieve his dream grew even stronger, despite being alone on this journey.

From below the valley, Sami glimpsed the high-rise "Hillary Suspension Bridge" that connects the two mountains in a unique view.

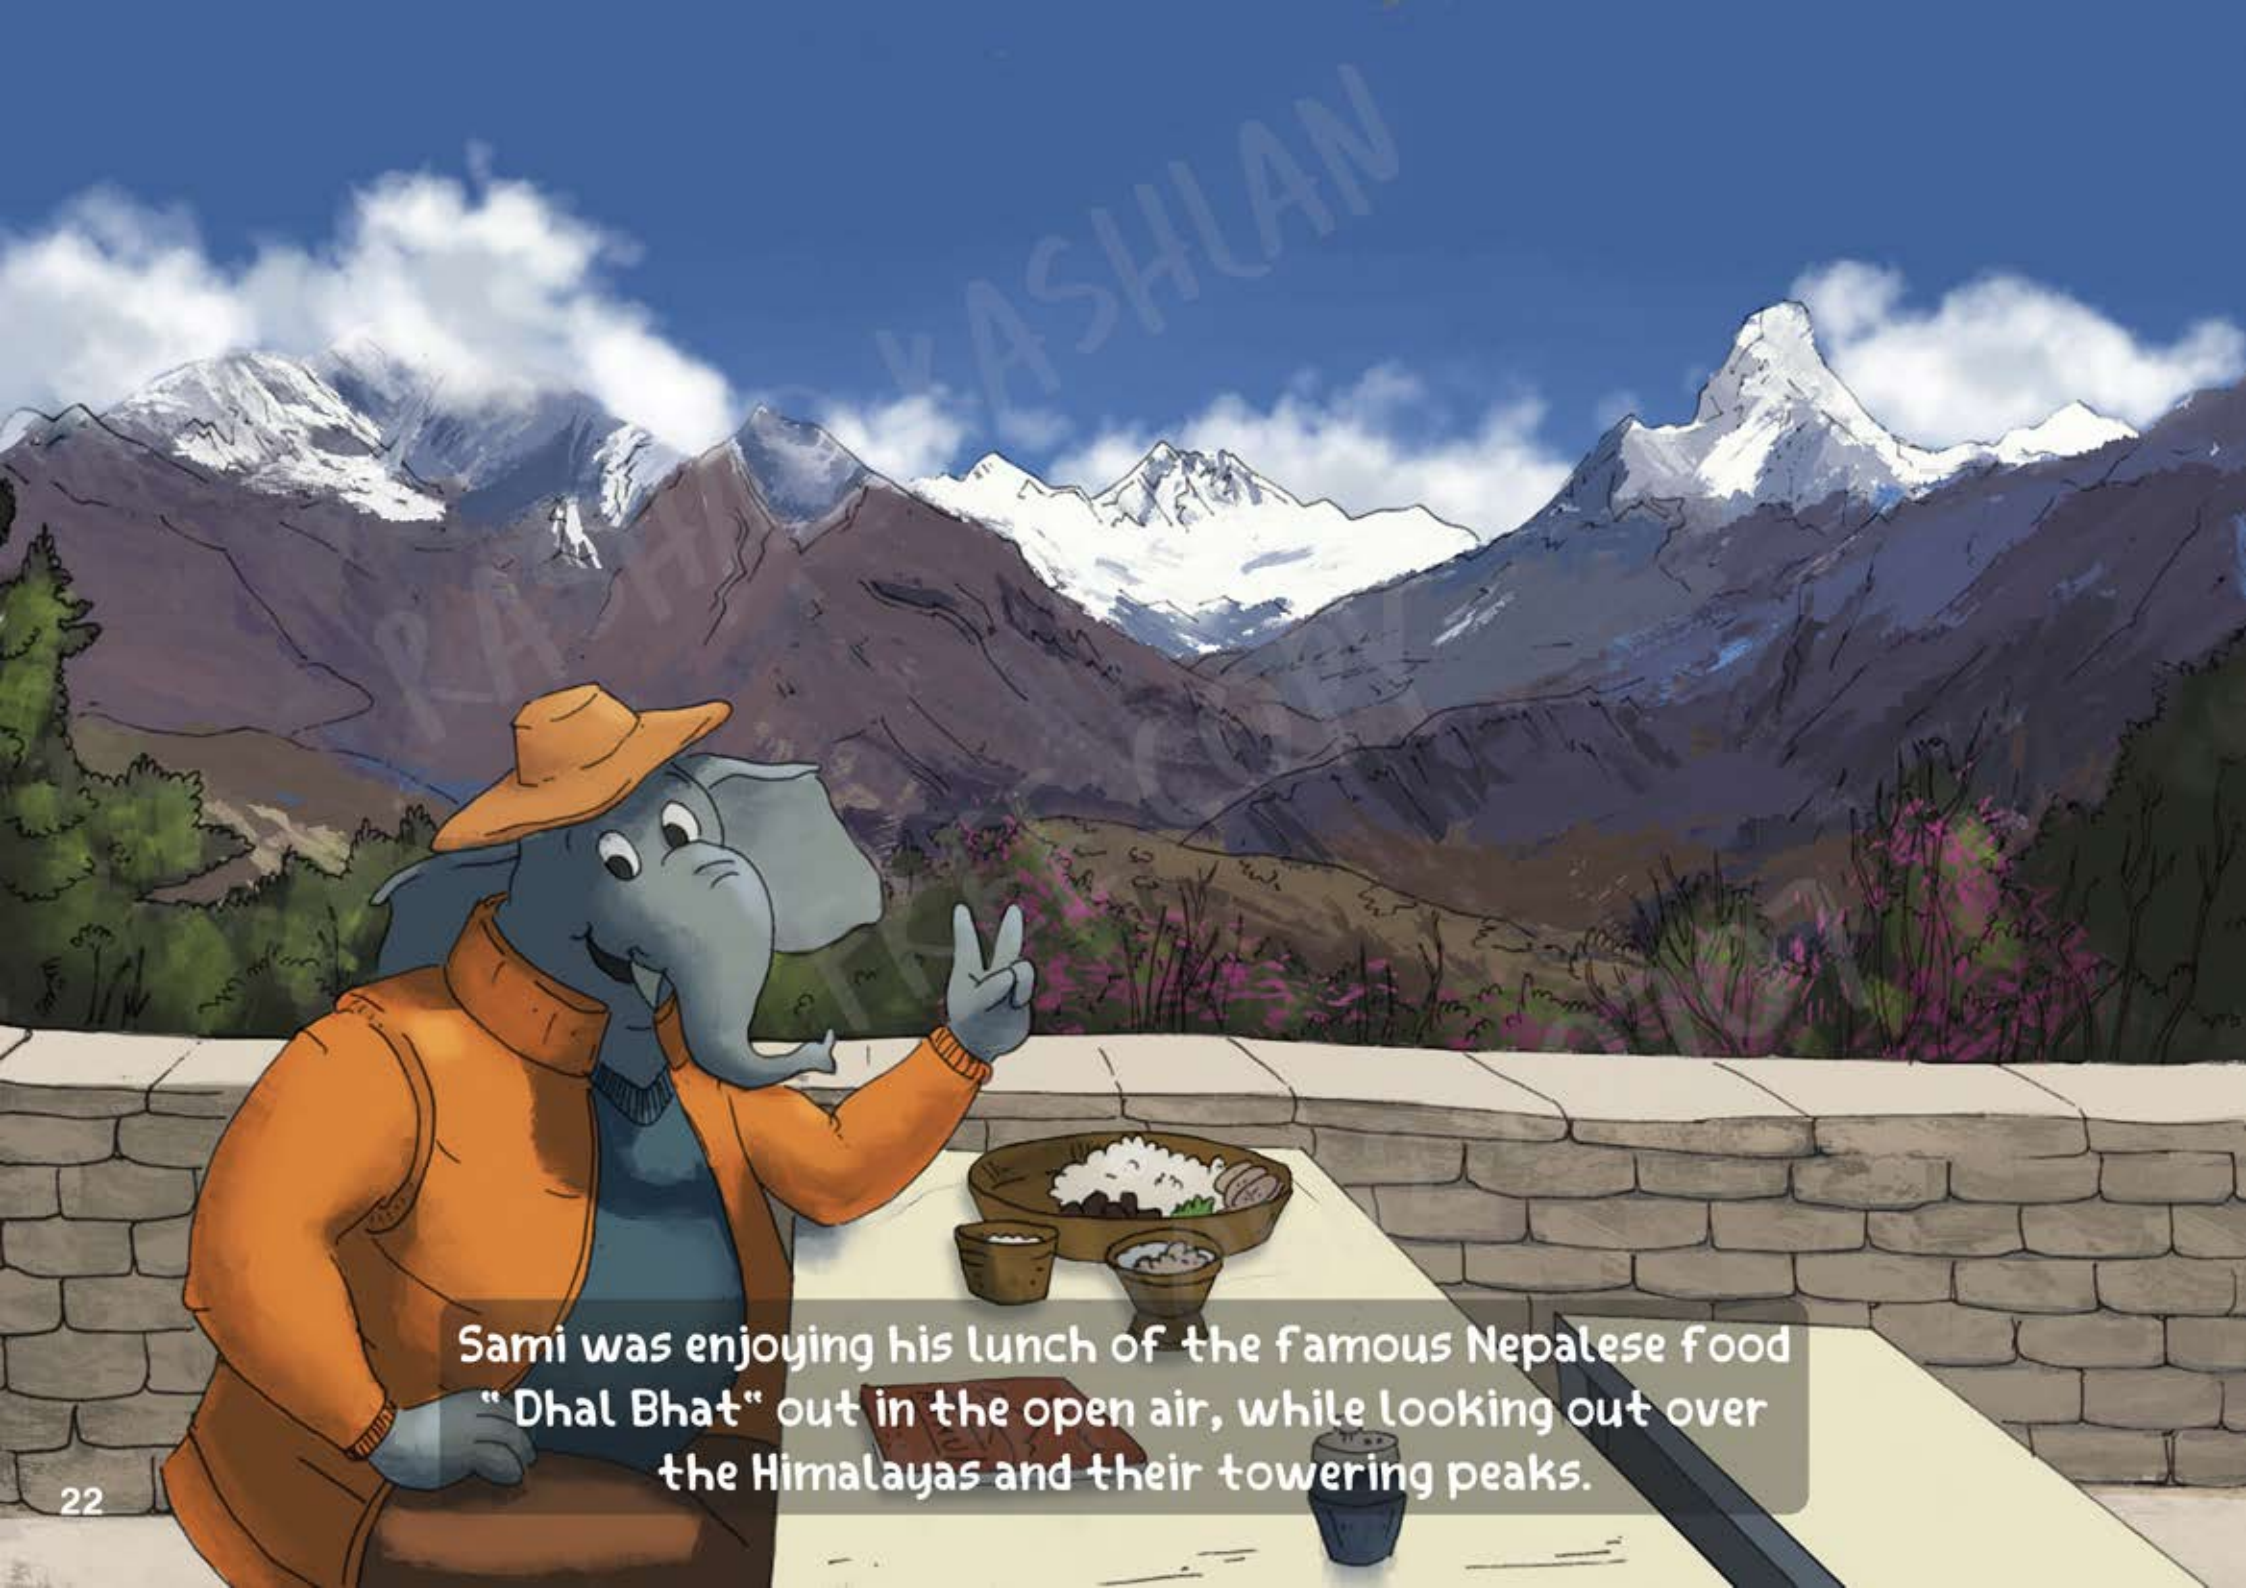
Sami felt courageous to cross the suspension bridge over the river. He stopped in the middle of the bridge and looked under his feet to watch the snow-white water flow, the wind gently shaking the bridge like a hammock between the two mountains.



The climb to the "Namche Bazar" was tiring, and Sami was slowly ascending the mountain while being careful with his steps on the stones.

Sami had to stay for a day in the village of "Namche Bazaar" in order for his body to adapt to the lack of oxygen in the air caused by its high altitude above the sea.

Sami visited the Sherpa monument 'Tenzing Norgay,' the first Nepalese to reach the summit of Everest, along with the New Zealander 'Edmund Hillary'.

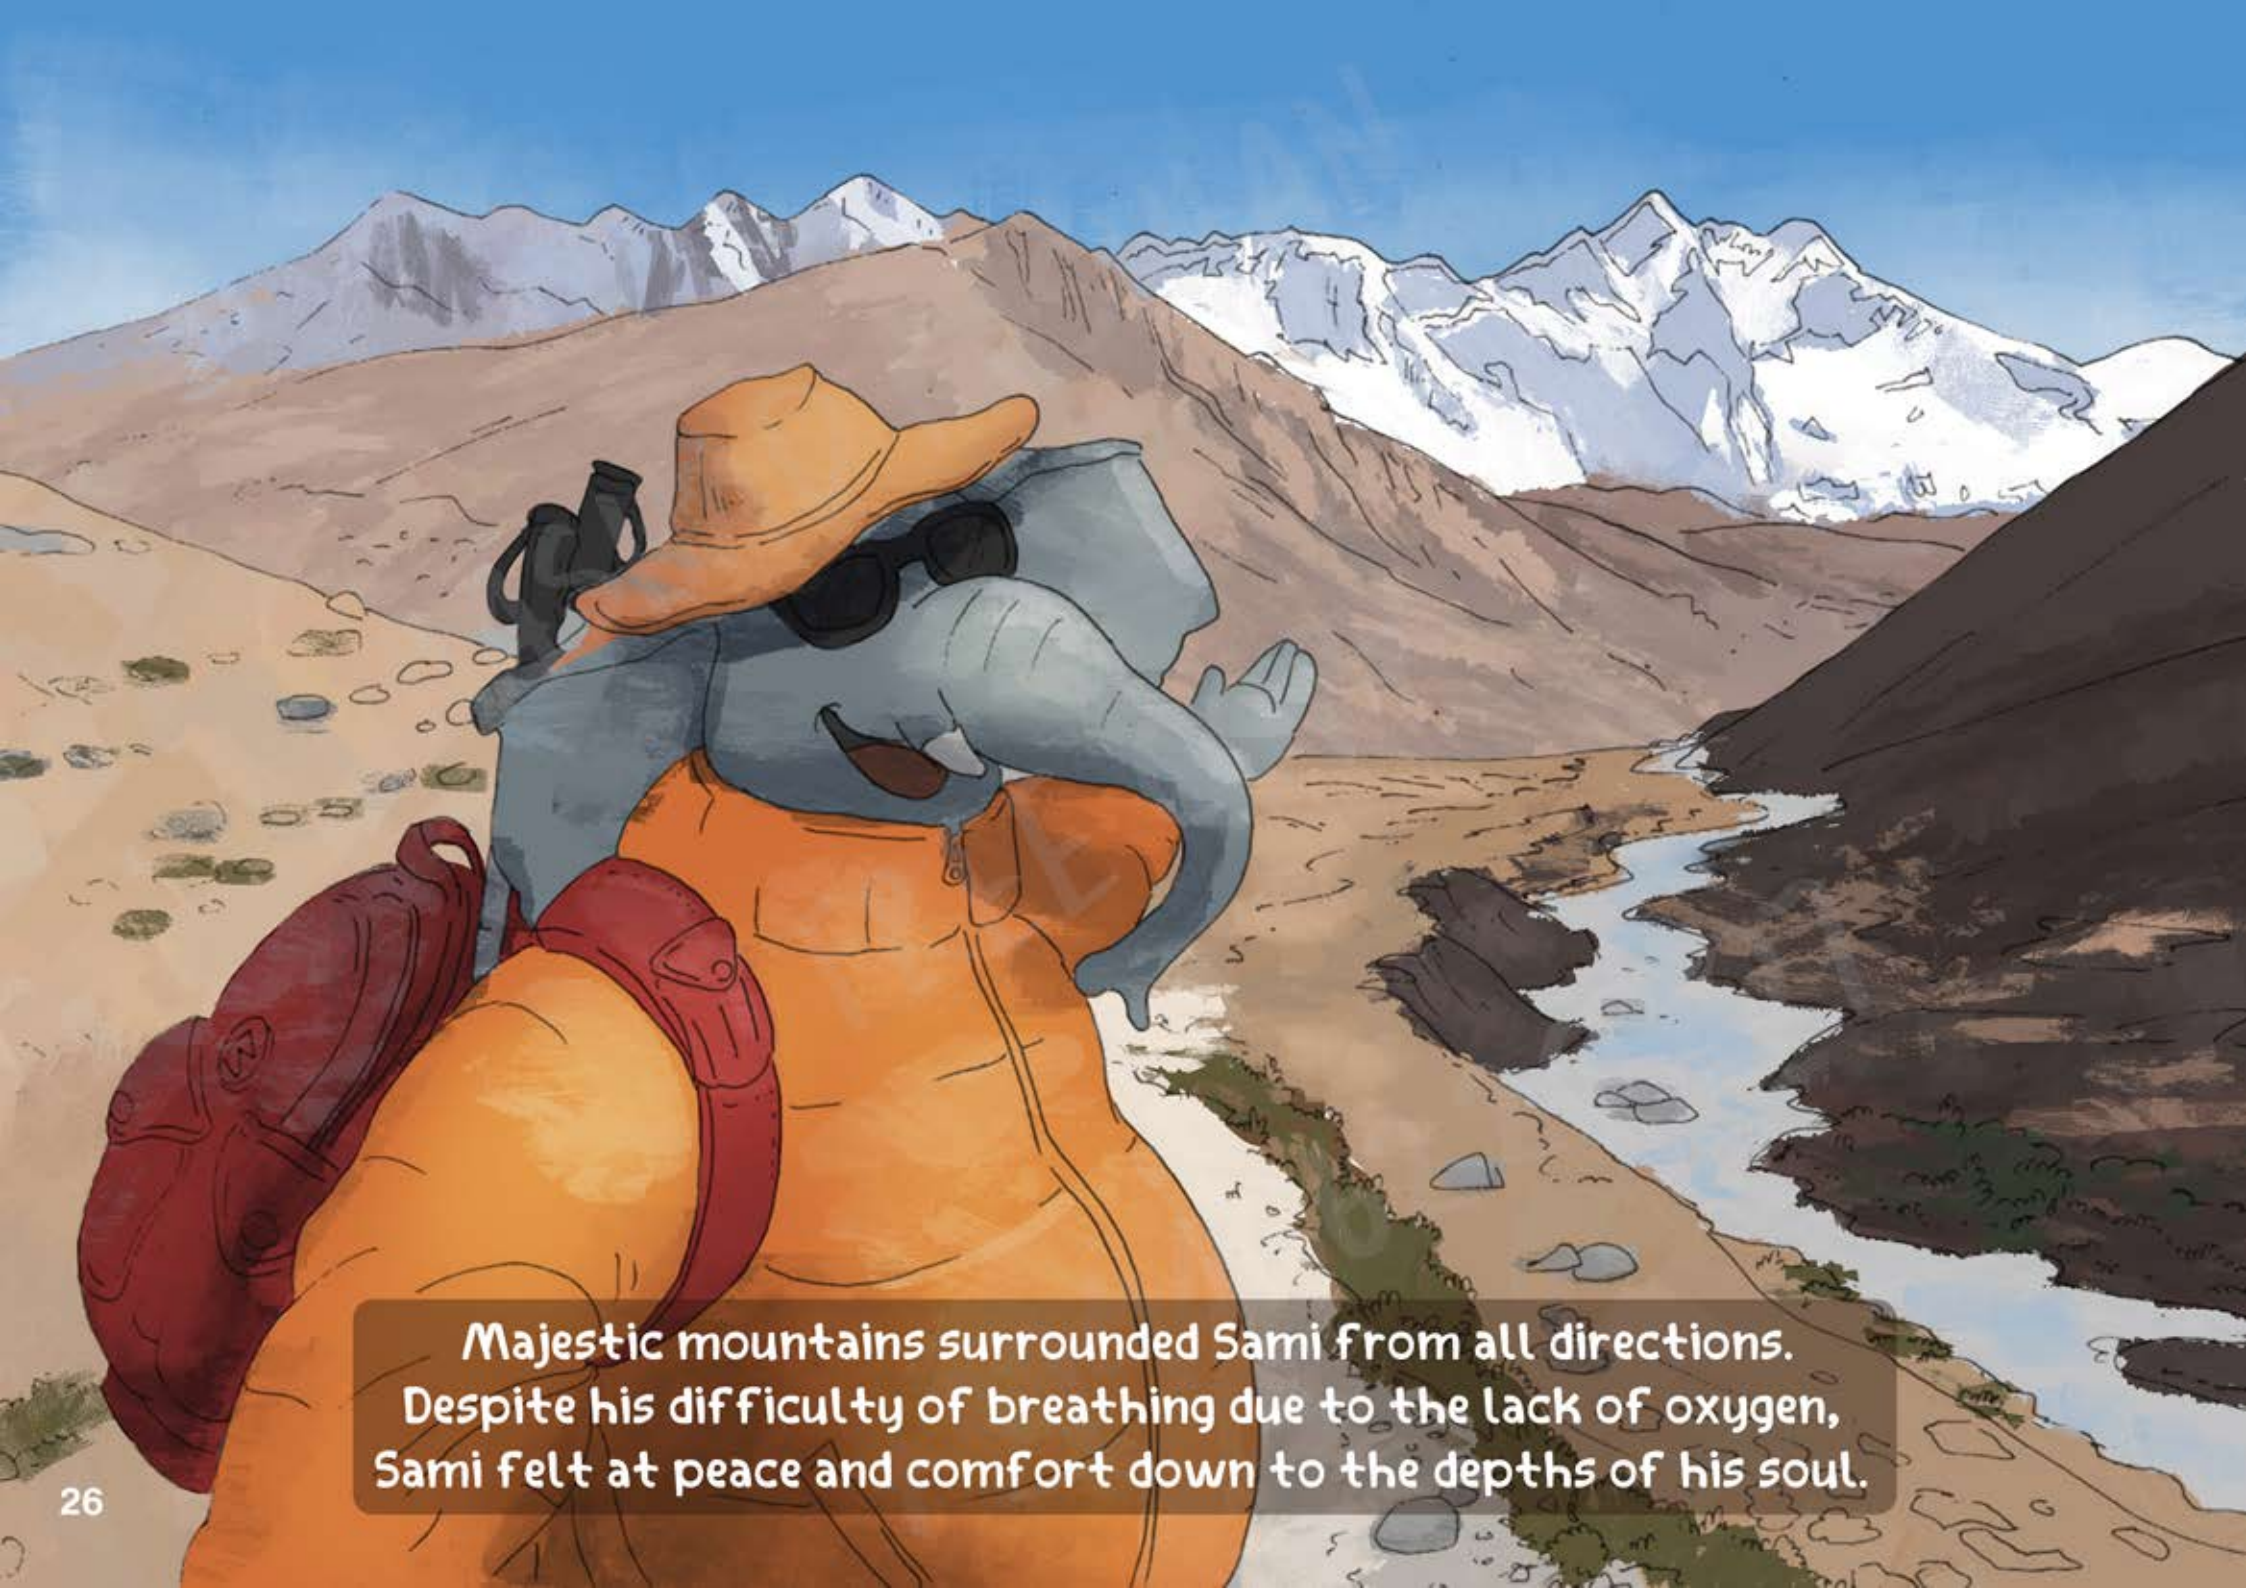


Sami was enjoying his lunch of the famous Nepalese food " Dhal Bhat" out in the open air, while looking out over the Himalayas and their towering peaks.

After a day of acclimation, Sami bid farewell to "Namche Bazar" to continue on his fun yet dangerous journey, driven by his passion towards his goal.

Our friend Sami was making way for huge yaks, laden with various merchandise.

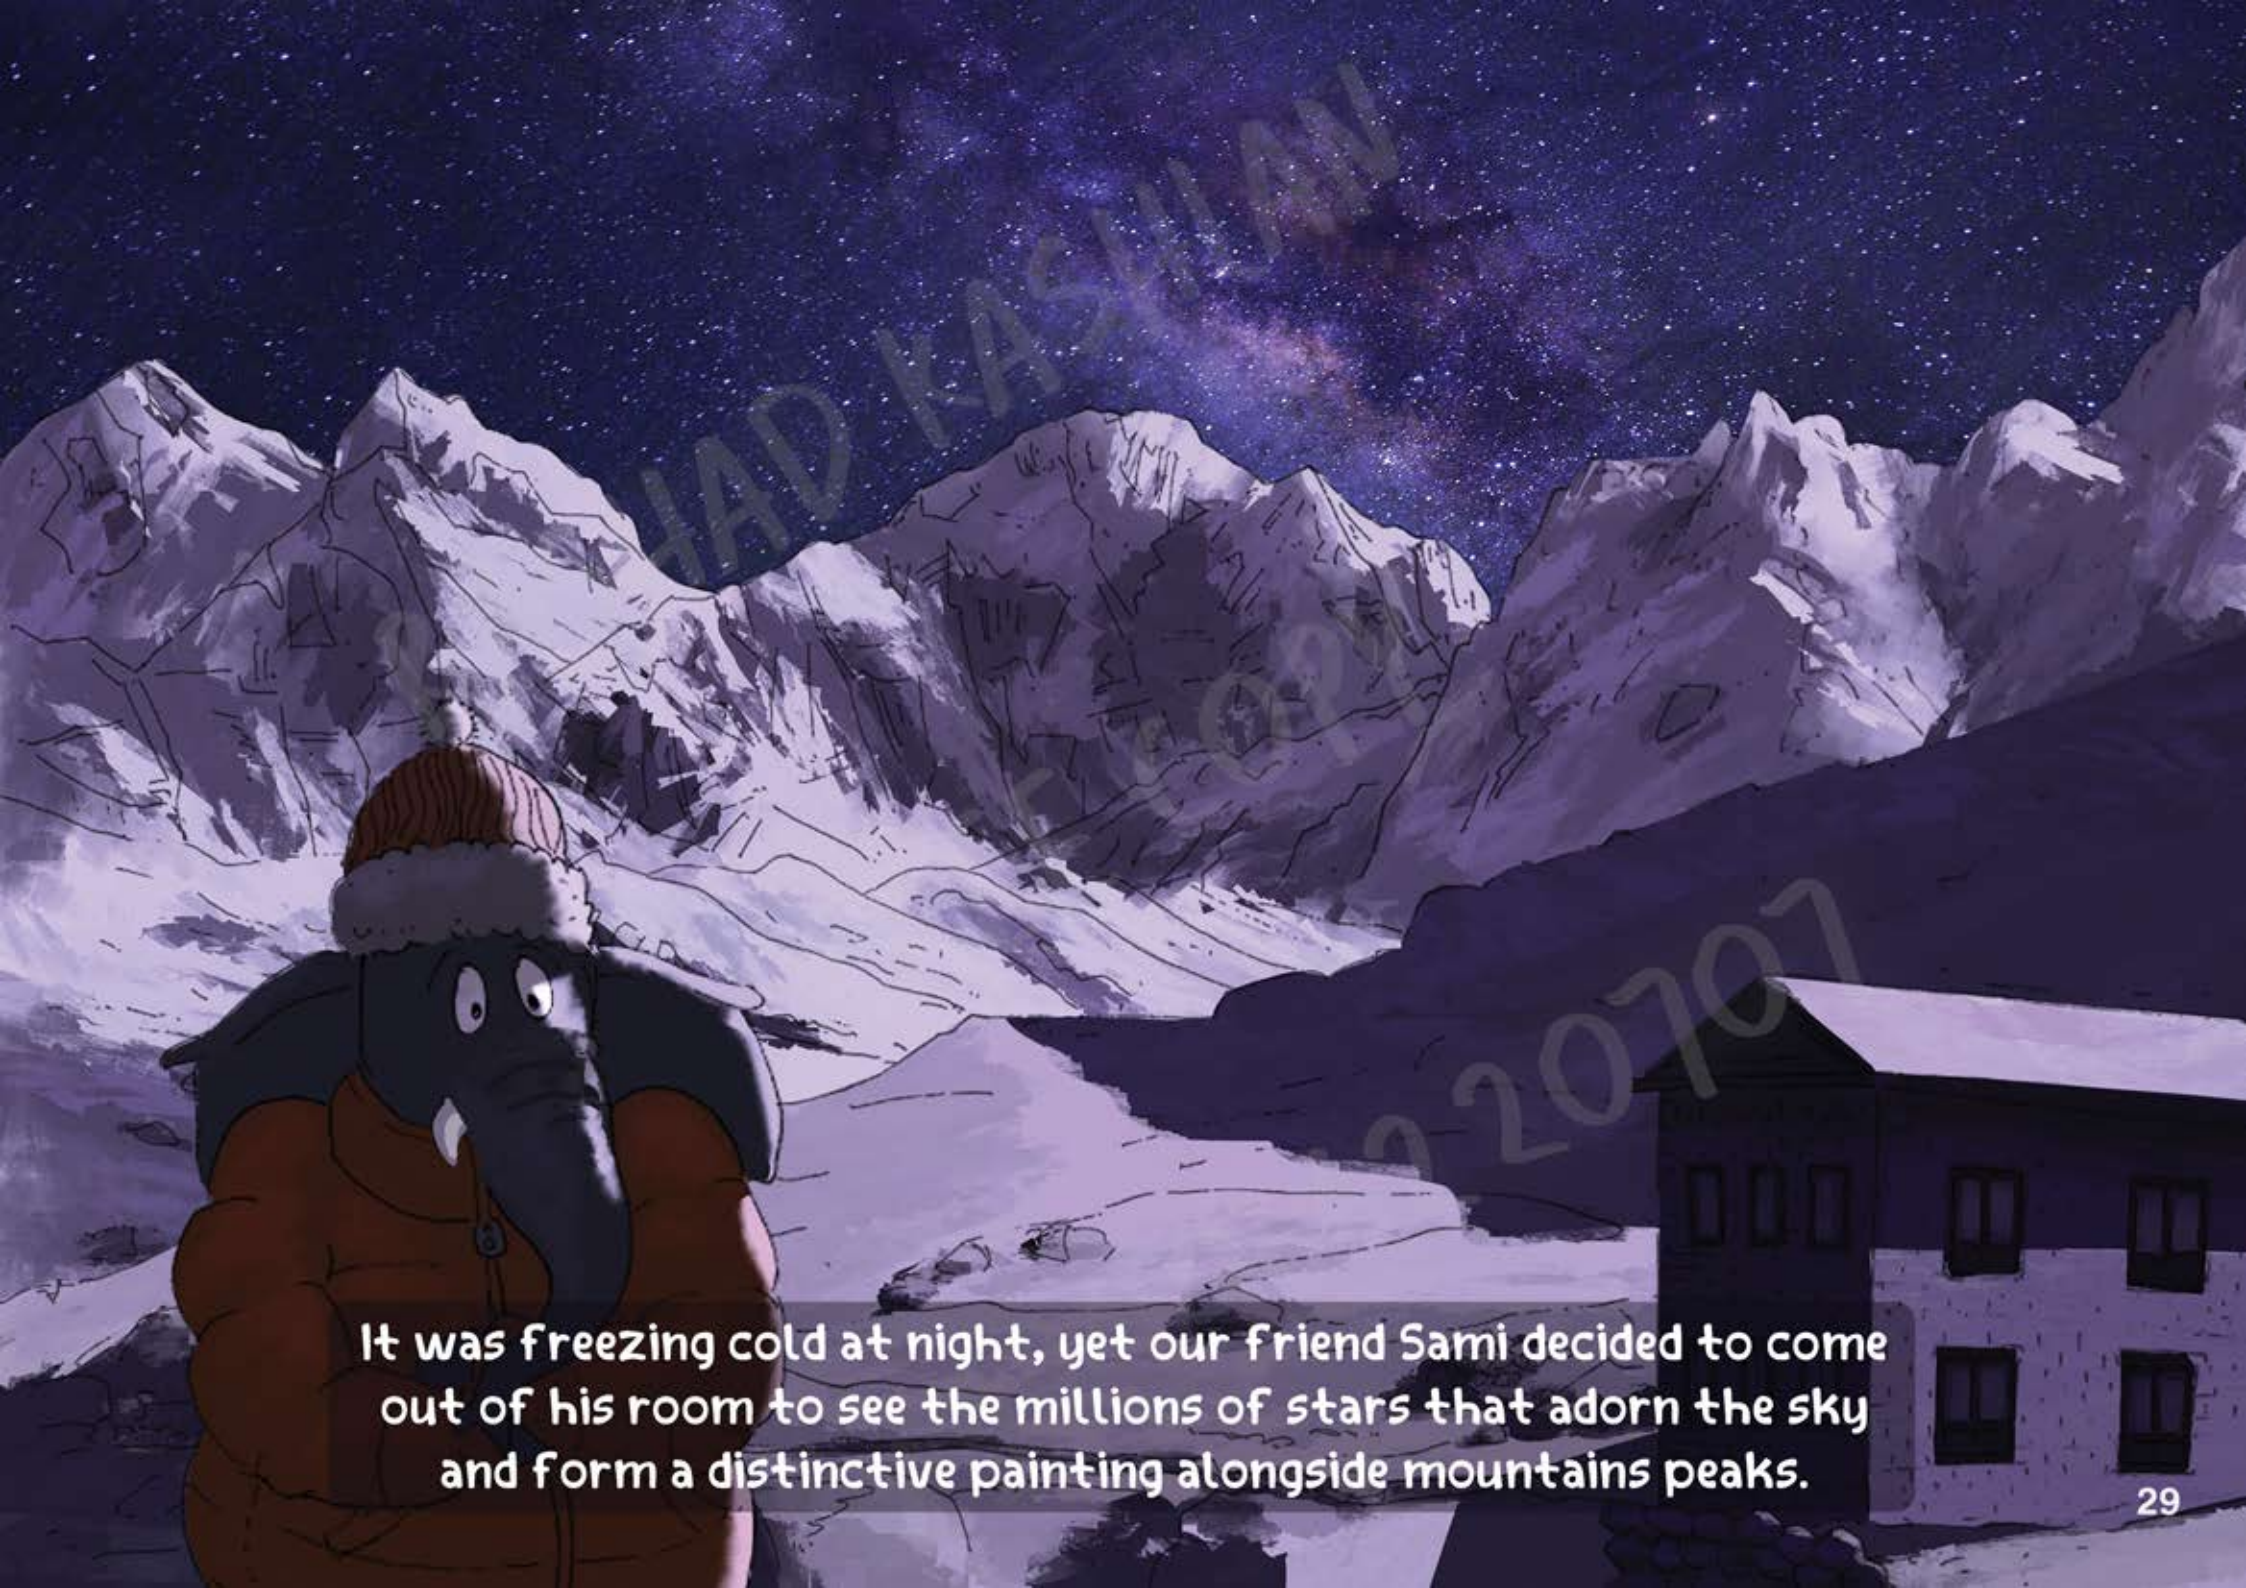
The view of 'Ama Dablam' mountain at sunset filled our dear Sami with happiness and satisfaction with his achievements and how far he had come in the past few days



Majestic mountains surrounded Sami from all directions.
Despite his difficulty of breathing due to the lack of oxygen,
Sami felt at peace and comfort down to the depths of his soul.

The road towards Everest requires patience and determination,
No matter how many times Sami falls, he always gets back up.
He was drinking a lot of water to keep his body hydrated and healthy.

Sami was cautious and careful as he passed between the rock and ice. The road became steeper and bumpier, and Sami began to suffer from fatigue and exhaustion.



It was freezing cold at night, yet our friend Sami decided to come out of his room to see the millions of stars that adorn the sky and form a distinctive painting alongside mountains peaks.

Sami's passion was pushing him to move towards Mount Everest. His dream will soon turn into reality, and he will definitely forget the weariness of walking when he reaches his goal.

It was a feeling that can never be described in words. Indeed, our friend Sami has finally reached Everest Base Camp after a challenging and yet certainly enjoyable journey, and successfully beat all the obstacles .

Sami stood proudly on the victory rock, waving the elephant flag high in the sky. With a loud voice, he exclaimed, 'I have fulfilled my dream of reaching the highest mountain in the world, Mount Everest!.
